commensurate with the danger complained of,⁴⁴ and where the promise is to repair after the completion of the work on hand, the servant assumes the risk of injury until such time by continuing at work.⁴⁵

(2) IMMINENCE OF DANGER AS AFFECTING RULE. Where the danger is so obvious and imminent that no prudent person would undertake to perform the service, the servant is not justified in continuing in the performance of his services and assumes the risk of any injury which he may sustain;⁴⁶ and where neither the master nor the servant contemplates any additional danger to the servant in the use of the defective instrument, the servant assumes the risk of injury notwithstanding the master's promise to repair.⁴⁷

(3) FORM AND SUFFICIENCY OF PROMISE — (a) IN GENERAL. To be sufficient, a promise by the master to remedy defects or remove danger must be definite and certain,⁴⁸ and must be made with a view to the servant's safety, and as an inducement to him to continue work.⁴⁹ The promise may, however, be implied as well as express,⁵⁰ general as well as individual.⁵¹

(b) BY WHOM MADE. The promise of a vice-principal or representative of the master is as binding as the promise of the master himself;⁵² and it is immaterial whether the servant making the promise had authority to do so, provided the injured servant, upon reasonable grounds, supposed that he did.⁵³

(4) RELIANCE ON FULFILMENT OF PROMISE. In order that a servant may be relieved from the operation of the doctrine of assumed risk from a defect complained of and the danger of which he was no longer willing to incur, it is essential that his remaining in the employment was induced by the promise of the master to remedy the defect, when he would not otherwise have done so;⁵⁴ and where the reliance is placed, not upon the promise, but upon an assurance of absence of danger, he cannot recover.⁵⁵

b. Comparative Knowledge of Master and Servant. A servant does not assume the risk of injuries from a latent defect because his opportunity of discovering it is the same as the master's;⁶⁹ but it is otherwise in the case of obvious defects, and a servant will be held to have assumed the risk where he had an equal opportunity with the master to discover them.⁷⁰

c. Opportunity to Discover Defect or Danger. There is no assumption of risks where there is an opportunity to discover the defect or danger,⁷¹ but where there is such opportunity, a servant assumes such risks as arise from open and obvious causes.⁷²

d. Apparent Danger From Obvious Defect. To show that a servant assumed the risks connected with his employment, it must appear, not only that a defect was patent and obvious, but that he knew the danger of working under such

Latent defects unknown to master.—If there is no neglect of due and ordinary care and diligence on the part of the master, and the injury is caused by latent defects, unknown alike to the master and the servant, and not discoverable by due and ordinary skill and diligence, it is a misadventure falling among the casualties incident to the business, and for which no one can be blamed. But if the defects which cause the injury are actually unknown either to the master or the servant, and not discoverable by due and ordinary inspection, and yet are such as result from a neglect of reasonable and ordinary care and diligence on the part of the master, the master will be liable in damages for the injury. *Mad River, etc., R. defective conditions. The mere fact that he could see and know the defect will not debar a recovery, unless the danger is so open and apparent that no ordinarily prudent person would encounter it.⁷³

e. Risks Outside Scope of Employment. The master is not liable for injuries resulting to a servant from causes open to the observation of the servant, and which it requires no special skill or training to foresee are likely to injure him, even though the undertaking be out of the line of his employment; but he is liable for injuries resulting from defects unknown to the servant, but known to the master or ascertainable by ordinary care on his part.⁷⁴ such as to prevent his appreciation of the danger to which he is exposed.⁷⁷ It is, however, the duty of the master to instruct a young or inexperienced servant;⁷⁸ but where he has given him such reasonable instructions and cautions regarding the dangers of his employment as are best calculated to enable him to avoid injury, the servant is upon the same footing as any other servant, and will be deemed to have assumed the usual and ordinary risks incident to his employment.⁷⁹

b. Knowledge by Master of Servant's Age or Inexperience. A master has the right to presume that a servant is qualified to perform the duties of his employment, and is not liable for injuries caused by the servant's inexperience, unless he was informed thereof.⁸⁰ So too a master is not liable for injuries to an infant, if his age, intelligence, and experience were such as to induce a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe him qualified for his employment.⁸¹

c. Knowledge by Servant of Defect or Danger. Where a servant by reason of his youth or inexperience is not acquainted with the dangers incident to his employment, he does not assume the risk thereof until the master apprises him of the dangers.⁸² Mere knowledge of a defect without appreciation of the danger

The fact that the servant solicited the employment and represented himself to be competent does not relieve the master of the duty of instructing him, if he knows that the servant is inexperienced, unless the danger is so obvious that even an inexperienced man would escape it by the exercise of ordinary care. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 104 Fed. 124, 43 C. C. A. 436. See also Felton v. Girardy, 104 Fed. 127, 43 C. C. A. 439.

is not enough to charge him with assumption of risk;⁸³ but his youth or inexperience will not excuse him, if he does, or ought to, know and appreciate the danger to which he is exposed.⁸⁴

d. Comparative Knowledge of Master and Servant. Where neither master nor servant has actual knowledge of a defect in machinery or appliances, but the servant is unskilled, and is not charged with the duty of inspection, knowledge of the defect will not be so readily imputed to him as to the master, upon whom rests the duty of inspection.⁸⁵

e. Obvious or Latent Dangers.⁸⁶ A servant, although under age or inexperienced, assumes all patent and obvious risks of his employment which he has sufficient intelligence to understand and appreciate.⁸⁷ Latent risks are not assumed unless brought to the servant's knowledge.⁸⁸

f. Risks Outside Scope of Employment. If a servant of full age and ordinary intelligence, upon being required by his master to perform duties more complicated and dangerous than those embraced in his original hiring, undertakes the same, and is injured by reason of his ignorance and inexperience, he cannot recover.⁸⁹ In the case of a child, however, it is the duty of the master to see that he does not assume risks outside of the scope of his employment.⁹⁰

g. Compliance With Commands or Threats.⁹¹ Where a young or inexperienced servant is injured while acting in obedience to the commands of, or under the compulsion of threats by, the master, he will not be held to have assumed the risks involved in doing so,⁹² unless he knew and appreciated the danger.⁹³

h. Neglect of Statutory Duty. A young or inexperienced servant does not assume risks arising upon his master's neglect of a statutory duty;⁹⁴ and where a statute forbids the employment of a child under a certain age, it is in effect a determination that a child of that age does not possess the judgment and discretion necessary for the pursuit of a dangerous work, and is not as a matter of law chargeable with the assumption of any risks of the employment.⁹⁵

8. COMPLIANCE WITH COMMANDS OR THREATS⁹⁶—a. In General. A servant acting under the commands or threats of his master does not assume the risk incident to the act commanded,⁹⁷ unless the danger incurred is fully appreciated and is such

b. After Notice or Complaint. Where a servant has knowledge of a defect or danger, and calls the attention of the master to it, but is ordered to proceed with the work, he will not be held to have assumed the risk of so doing,⁴ unless the danger is so manifest that a person of ordinary prudence and caution would not have incurred it.⁵

c. After Promise to Point Out Dangers. The rule that a servant engaging in a hazardous employment assumes the risks of the ordinary perils of the business does not apply where the servant is required by his master to enter upon a hazardous task, under an unfulfilled promise to point out its hazards to him.⁶

9. RISKS OUTSIDE SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT⁷—a. Voluntary Act of Servant. Where a servant voluntarily and of his own motion exposes himself to risks outside of the scope of his regular employment, without or against the order of the master or vice-principal, and is injured thereby, the master is not liable.⁸ But was free from contributory negligence, does not make the master liable, where the injury to the servant resulted from a risk which he assumed.¹⁶

b. Personal Direction of Work by Master. A servant does not assume the risk of injury from the negligence of the master while the latter is personally directing the work.¹⁷

c. Comparative Negligence. In some jurisdictions a servant may recover for an injury caused by the gross negligence of the master, if he is free from contributory negligence, or such negligence is slight as compared with that of the master.¹⁸ The doctrine of comparative negligence does not, however, apply where a risk has been voluntarily assumed by the servant.¹⁹

d. Concurrent Negligence of Master and Fellow Servant. A servant does not assume the risk of injury from the concurrent negligence of the master and a fellow servant.²⁰

F. Contributory Negligence²¹.—1. GENERAL NATURE AND APPLICATION OF DOCTRINE — a. Rule Stated. Where the negligence, or want of ordinary care and caution, of a servant so far contributes to his injury that it would not have occurred but for such negligence, he cannot as a general rule recover therefor.²²

Contributory negligence consists in the performance of some negligent act, or the negligent omission to perform some duty, which materially contributed to, and, in conjunction with the negligence of the master, was one of the elements of the proximate cause of, the injury to the servant. Faulkner v. Mammoth Min. Co., 23 Utah 437, 66 Pac. 799.

Where a person is employed in the presence of known danger, to constitute contributory negligence it must be shown that he voluntarily and unnecessarily exposed himself to the danger. Potts v. Shreveport Belt R. Co., 110 La. 1, 34 So. 103, 98 Am. St. Rep. 452.

There is no practical distinction between commissive contributory negligence and such as might be imputed to the servant for voluntarily submitting himself to known dangers and risks arising from the master's negligence. Goltz v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 22 Minn. 55.

The doctrine does not apply to an action against the master to recover damages for an injury to one of two fellow servants by the negligence or wilful act of the other, where the master had no such notice of plaintiff's supposed negligence, or of the alleged wilfulness, that he could guard against them.²⁵

b. What Law Governs. In a suit brought in one state by a servant against his master for injuries received in another state, the law of the latter as to contributory negligence prevails.²⁶

c. Statutory Provisions—(1) EFFECT OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS. In a number of jurisdictions statutes have been enacted regulating the liability of the master for injuries to his servant, more especially where the injury is caused by the negligence of a fellow servant. Such statutes do not, however, change the preëxisting rules as to contributory negligence.²⁷ Where, however, a statute gives a right of action to a servant of a railroad company injured by any defect in the company's machinery, the use of obviously defective machinery will not prevent a recovery, unless the apparent danger is so great that its assumption would amount to a reckless indifference to probable consequences.²⁸

(ii) NEGLECT OF STATUTORY DUTY—(A) By Master.²⁹ It is very generally held that the failure of the master to comply with statutory requirements for the safety of his servants does not deprive him of the defense of contributory negligence,³⁰ unless the terms of the statute are such as clearly to exclude such defense.³¹

(B) By Servant. Where a statute directly commands or prohibits a certain act, a servant who is injured while acting in violation of its provisions cannot recover.³² But a servant who has no control over the roof of the mine in which he is working is not guilty of contributory negligence where, in obedience to orders, he fails to prop the roof in compliance with a statute making it a misdemeanor for a miner to fail to prop the roofs and entries under his control.³³ Nor is a servant prevented from recovering for personal injuries caused by his master's negligence in allowing the use of frozen dynamite, because he has not obtained a written permit to use dynamite as required by statute.⁸⁴

d. Comparative Negligence.⁸⁵ The doctrine of comparative negligence obtains in some jurisdictions, and the liability of the master for a personal injury to a servant depends upon the relative degree of care or want of care manifested by both parties.⁸⁶

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE⁸⁷ — a. In General — (1) CARE REQUIRED OF SERVANT. To render the master liable for injuries to a servant, the latter must have exercised ordinary and reasonable care, that is, such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances.⁸⁸ etc., Co. v. Clay, 51 Ohio St. 542, 38 N. E. 610, 25 L. R. A. 848, where it was held, under a similar statute, that a custom which imposes upon another servant the work of posting and propping the roof of a mine will not exonerate a miner from the duty enjoined by the statute.

36. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sweeney, 52 Ill. 325.

If the servant's negligence was slight as compared with that of the master, and the negligence of the master was gross, the servant will not be prevented from recovering on account of his own negligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 116 Ill. 206, 4 N. E. 381. See also Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. O'Connor, 115 Ill. 254, 3 N. E. 501; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. O'Connor, 77 Ill. 391; *Fairbank v. The doctrine does not obtain in Delaware (Stewart v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 8 Houst. (Del.) 450, 17 Atl. 639), Georgia (East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Maloy, 77 Ga. 237, 2 S. Pointer*, 14 Kan. 37), or Tennessee (East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, 89 Tenn. 235, 14 S. W. 603).

Slight negligence on the part of railroad company will not make it liable for an injury to a brakeman, caused by his negligence in failing to avoid being struck by a bridge, the location of which he well knew. Jones v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 82 Ky. 610.

Highest degree of care not required see Hester v. Jacob Dold Packing Co., 95 Mo. App. 16, 75 S. W. 695.

Intelligence and understanding of servant not the test.—In testing the conduct of a servant suing for an injury, the inquiry should be, not what degree of care his "intelligence and understanding" would have enabled him to exercise under the existing circumstances, but what amount of care might under such circumstances be reasonably expected of an ordinarily prudent adult. Georgia Cotton Oil Co. v. Jackson, 112 Ga. 620, 37 S. E. 873.

Care of the "common run" of people insufficient see National Syrup Co. v. Carlson, 42 Ill. App. 178.

Equal means of knowledge with master.—Where the servant had equal means with the master of ascertaining the defective condition of the appliances causing the injury no recovery can be had. Hobbs v. Bowie, 121 Ga. 421, 49 S. E. 285.

Where a servant assumes the selection of materials for a job of work, he must examine them and exercise his best judgment in selecting such only as are fit for the purpose. Lee v. Kansas City Gas Co., 91 Mo. App. 612.

The rule requiring a traveler to stop, look, and listen before crossing a railroad is inapplicable to a servant about to cross, in the course of his work, a private railway in his master's plant. Weiss v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 88 Fed. 23, 31 C. C. A. 363. Compare Pennsylvania Co. v. Mahoney, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. 409, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 366, holding that where a servant is not engaged at work on the track in such a way as to have his attention drawn from trains coming or going, but is simply passing over the track, he is obliged to exercise as high a degree of care with respect to the work,³⁹ and it should also be commensurate with the dangers of the employment.⁴⁰

(II) *RELIANCE ON CARE OF MASTER OR FELLOW SERVANTS*⁴¹—(A) In General. Unless the danger is actually known to the servant,⁴² or is so obvious and imminent that an ordinarily prudent person would refuse to incur it,⁴³ he has the right to rely upon the performance by the master or his authorized agents, other than his own fellow servants,⁴⁴ of the duties imposed upon the master by law for the protection of his servants;⁴⁵ and where two servants are charged with the looking and listening as any other person lawfully or of right passing over the track.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 675.

Where a servant is required to give his attention to the work in hand, while working in a dangerous place, he is entitled to rely on the fact that the master, knowing such to be the fact will exercise due care and diligence to protect him from danger not directly arising from such work. But the rule will not apply in case of a servant who, walking across a track to get his tools, is run over by an approaching train, since the act of walking, being automatic, is not such an act as would engross a man's attention to such an extent that, with ordinary care and diligence, he would not see or hear an approaching train. *Holland v. In order to hold a servant guilty of contributory negligence, when injured in the course of his employment, it must appear that he was sufficiently acquainted with the work assigned to him to know and appreciate the dangers incident thereto; and, where nothing dangerous is apparent to the servant in connection with his employment, he has the right to presume that it is reasonably safe, and that he will be notified of special elements of danger not open to ordinary observation, but which are known to his master. Lebeau v. Dyerville Mfg. Co., 26 R. I. 34, 57 Atl. 1092.

Selection of fellow servants.—A servant is not bound to ascertain at his peril whether the master has used reasonable care in the selection of those employed in the same branch of service, but is warranted in assuming that his employer has performed his duty in that respect, and, until notice to the contrary is brought home to him, may act on such assumption. the servant from danger,⁵⁰ unless the danger is so obvious and imminent that no ordinarily prudent person would undertake to perform the service.⁵¹

(c) On Care of Fellow Servants Under Statutes. While, under statutes limiting the fellow servant doctrine, a servant has the right to rely upon the exercise of reasonable care by his fellow servants,⁵² this does not absolve him from caring for his own safety, as an ordinarily prudent man would do under like circumstances,⁵³ and he cannot recover for an injury received by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant, if he knew, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, might have known, thereof.⁵⁴

(iii) *KNOWLEDGE OF DEFECTS OR DANGERS*⁵⁵—(A) In General. Where a servant has actual or constructive knowledge of defects and dangers of such a character that a reasonably prudent man, under similar circumstances, would exercise due care to avoid the dangers, and is injured by reason of his failure to use ordinary care, he is guilty of contributory negligence.⁵⁶ But if a servant had

(B) Continuing Work With Knowledge of Danger—(1) IN GENERAL. Where a servant continued work with knowledge, actual or constructive, of dangers which an ordinarily prudent man would refuse to subject himself to, he is guilty of contributory negligence;⁵⁹ but where there is nothing to show that the danger which a servant encountered was so imminent that any reasonably prudent man would have abandoned the work, the servant in continuing to work is not guilty of such negligence as will bar his right to recover for injuries sustained by him.⁶⁰

Danger caused by accident.—Although a rule requires trains to approach time-table stations under control, "expecting to find the main track occupied," the engineer of the second section of a train is not chargeable with knowledge that the front section is there, when, but for an accident, unknown to him, it would have passed on before his arrival. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Mothershed, 121 Ala. 650, 26 So. 10.

Reliance on custom.—Where it was not the custom to make flying switches with cars in front of the engine, the fact that a servant, while standing on the repair track, saw an engine with two cars in front passing on the main line, but had no notice that four cars were behind the engine, does not show contributory negligence, where the cars behind the engine were thrown on the repair track, and struck plaintiff, without any warning of their approach. Service requiring exclusive attention.—In an action for death caused by defects of which deceased had notice it is not error to instruct that the service in which he was engaged required his exclusive attention, he could not be expected always to bear in mind the existence of the defect, and under such circumstances a finding of contributory negligence would not be justified, the jury being fully instructed to determine from all the circumstances whether deceased exercised reasonable prudence. (2) AFTER NOTICE OR COMPLAINT TO MASTER. Whether a servant is guilty of contributory negligence in continuing at work after notice or complaint to the master of defects or dangers is generally a question of fact for the jury.⁶¹ The mere fact that the servant has complained to the master will not exonerate him of contributory negligence,⁶² unless he has reason to expect that, in consequence of his notification to the master, the defect will be repaired before he will be subjected to danger from it.⁶³ On the other hand, the mere continued use of a defective appliance after complaint is not necessarily contributory negligence, where the servant is injured in the hurry of business, while in the discharge of his duty;⁶⁴ and where a servant is injured owing to the failure of the master to enforce a certain rule, there is no contributory negligence on the part of the servant in continuing in the service after the master was notified of the violation of the rule, and had ordered its enforcement.⁶⁵

(3) AFTER PROMISE TO REMEDY DEFECT.⁶⁶ Where a servant notifies his master of defects in the tools, machinery, appliances, or ways and places for work, and the master promises to remove them, the servant is not guilty of contributory negligence by continuing at work for a reasonable time,⁶⁷ unless the danger is so obvious and imminent that no ordinarily prudent man would do so.⁶⁸

(c) Extent of Knowledge. There is a distinction between knowledge of defects and knowledge of the risks resulting from such defects, and a servant is not chargeable with contributory negligence if he knows that defects exist, but does not know, or cannot know by the exercise of ordinary care, that there is danger;⁶⁹

and even the fact that a servant has performed work, knowing it to be dangerous, does not of itself make him guilty of contributory negligence, but it must appear that he did that which was dangerous in a negligent manner.⁷⁰ On the other hand, a servant's knowledge of danger need not amount to full information, or to absolute certainty;⁷¹ and a servant who has been advised of a certain danger, and how to avoid it, is not excused for exposing himself to it by the fact that he does not realize the magnitude of the possible injuries.⁷²

(D) Comparative Knowledge of Master and Servant. Where a danger is as open and obvious to the servant as to the master,⁷³ or where the servant has better means of knowledge than the master,⁷⁴ he will be charged with such negligence as to bar a recovery. So too where it does not appear that the master knew or with ordinary care ought to have known of the defect which caused the injury, and it does appear that the servant had equal means with the master of ascertaining its existence, the servant cannot recover.⁷⁵

(IV) *SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.*⁷⁶ Where a servant sustains injuries while attempting without authority to do something not within the scope of his employment, he cannot recover,⁷⁷ unless there be a pressing emergency upon him to do that work;⁷⁸ and the same is true where the injury is sustained while he is voluntarily and unnecessarily absent from his post of duty,⁷⁹ or where, not in the performance of his duty, he places himself in a perilous position, and neglects to exercise ordinary care for his own safety.⁸⁰

(v) *INADVERTENT ACT OR MISTAKE OF JUDGMENT.*⁸¹ Whether or not a servant is chargeable with contributory negligence where he is injured through an inadvertent act or error of judgment wholly depends upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case.⁸² If at the time of his injury he was acting as an ordinarily prudent person would act under the same or similar circumstances, he is not chargeable with negligence;⁸³ but if his injury was caused by a want of due care on his part, he cannot recover,⁸⁴ in the absence of any circumstances producing hurry, excitement, or confusion.⁸⁵

(vi) SUGGESTIONS OR REMONSTRANCES BY SERVANT. Negligence cannot be imputed to a servant for failing to remonstrate with another servant over whom he has no control, and who represents the master with respect to the work, in the performance of which the injury is sustained.⁸⁶ But where a servant participates in a dangerous course of action either by advising or instigating it, or by neglecting to expostulate, and is in a position to obviate the danger, he cannot recover;⁸⁷ and even where the injury results from the action of a superior officer, the servant cannot recover if such action was induced by negligent statements on his part.⁸⁸ So too where a servant fails to obey an order of his superior as first given and acquiesces in the adoption of a different course of action suggested by his fellow servants, and consented to by such superior, and by reason of which the injury is sustained, he is guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery.⁸⁹

(vii) DISEASE OR OTHER PHYSICAL CONDITION. Where a servant whose duty requires him to be in a position of danger becomes sick and unconscious, and is unable to get away, and injury results to him from such condition, he is not guilty of contributory negligence;⁹⁰ but if he negligently falls asleep in a dangerous position,⁹¹ or becomes sick or unconscious while wrongfully in a position of danger,⁹² and injury results, he cannot recover. Nor can a servant recover for an injury such as blood-poisoning, which is proximately caused by the impurity of his blood and the diseased condition of his system.⁹³

b. Inexperienced or Youthful Servant — (i) IN GENERAL. While the youth or inexperience of a servant does not of itself relieve him from the effect of contributory negligence,⁹⁴ yet his age, intelligence, and experience are matters which may properly be considered by the jury on the issue of his negligence;⁹⁵ and he is only bound to exercise such care and prudence as may reasonably be expected of a person of his age, capacity, and experience in the same circumstances, and not as high a degree of care as would be required from a person of maturity and experience.⁹⁶

(II) REPRESENTATIONS AS TO AGE AND EXPERIENCE. A minor who, to obtain employment, represents himself to be of age, is to be judged by the same rule of negligence as an adult;⁹⁷ and where an inexperienced person has obtained employment by pretending to an experience which he has not had, he cannot recover for an injury caused by his inexperience;⁹⁸ and the same has been held to be true, although the servant made known the fact that he was wholly inexperienced in the occupation which he solicited.⁹⁹ But a representation as to experience will not impute to the servant knowledge of dangers arising from the gross negligence of the master, but only those incident to the work when conducted with ordinary care and prudence.¹

(III) SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT. Where a minor or inexperienced servant voluntarily places himself in a position of danger, not called for by the nature of his employment, he is guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery for injuries received by him.²

(IV) *KNOWLEDGE OF DANGER.*³ While a young and inexperienced servant is chargeable with less foresight and care than a man, yet, if he is aware of the danger, his negligence will defeat recovery for an injury to which it directly contributed.⁴ But, in order to charge a minor or inexperienced adult with contributory negligence, he must have actual or constructive knowledge of the danger, and not merely of the defects which cause it.⁵

(V) DUTY TO DISCOVER OR REMEDY DEFECTS. An inexperienced or youthful servant is not precluded by contributory negligence from recovering from his master for an injury caused by a hidden danger;⁶ and where a master places a young or inexperienced person at work in an exposed and dangerous situation, he is bound to give him due caution and instruction, and his failure to do so is not excused by the fact that the servant by the use of his eyesight might have seen the danger, or by the use of his reason might have realized and avoided it.⁷

(vi) *PRECAUTIONS AGAINST KNOWN DANGERS.*⁸ A person of such age and experience as to be capable of exercising discretion, and of appreciating the risks of the work in which he is engaged, cannot recover for injuries caused by his inattention to his surroundings, and failure to take due precautions against known or obvious dangers.⁹

(vii) *DISOBEDIENCE OF RULES OR ORDERS.*¹⁰ Where a young or inexperienced servant, while acting in disobedience to his master's rules or orders, assumes unusual dangers, and is injured before his action can, in the exercise of proper care, be discovered and stopped, the master is not liable.¹¹ If, however, a rule has been habitually disobeyed, and the work cannot well be done without disregarding it, the servant is not guilty of contributory negligence in doing so.¹²

(viii) COMPLIANCE WITH COMMANDS OR THREATS. Where a young or inexperienced servant undertakes dangerous work in obedience to the commands or threats of the master or his authorized agent, he will not be held guilty of contributory negligence,¹³ unless the danger was so manifest and glaring that it must have been known to one of his age and experience that he could not do it without injury.¹⁴

charged with knowledge of the fact that they have been furnished.²⁰ Similarly, where appliances for doing certain work can be picked up at any time around the place of work, the failure of the master to furnish them specially does not render him liable for an injury to a servant, caused by his not using them.²¹ If, however, the servant, on the exigency of the occasion, uses the appliances most convenient, and they fail to operate properly, then the defective appliance is the proximate cause of the injury, and the servant is entitled to recover.²²

(b) *Duty to Obtain Appliances.*²³ Where a servant knows, or is charged with knowledge of, defects or dangers, and is injured by reason of his failure to demand or obtain appliances by which the danger might have been obviated, he is guilty of such contributory negligence as to bar a recovery.²⁴

(c) Choice of Appliances. Where proper appliances are furnished to, or are procurable by, a servant, and he voluntarily and unnecessarily elects to use an improper, defective, or dangerous appliance and is injured, his negligence will bar a recovery.²⁵ He has, however, the right to use such of the appliances furnished as appear to him to be reasonably safe for the performance of his task.²⁶

(d) Choice of Ways and Places For Work. Where a servant unnecessarily and of his own volition uses an unsafe way or place to do his work, when other and safer ways or places are available, he cannot recover for injuries sustained by reason of his negligent action, if the danger is such that no ordinarily prudent

The breaking of the only proper tool in the possession of workmen, and the substitution by them of an improper one, will not render the master liable for injuries to one of the workmen owing to the use of the improper tool, in the absence of evidence that the master did not furnish a sufficiency of proper tools at the place from which those used were taken, or within convenient reach. Rule requiring conductors to inspect trains construed see Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Burris, 111 Fed. 882, 50 C. C. A. 48.

A locomotive engineer is not charged with the duty of inspecting his engine for dan-danger, it is held that he is guilty of contributory negligence if he fails to do so.⁴⁵

(B) *Opportunity to Discover or Remedy.*⁴⁴ In order to charge a servant with contributory negligence for failure to observe or remedy defects, it must appear that he had, and neglected to avail himself of, an opportunity to discover them;⁴⁵ and where the nature of a servant's duties or the exigencies of the occasion are such as to require his whole attention, he is not required to anticipate, look for, or expect danger,⁴⁶ especially where it arises from the discharge of a duty outside of his usual routine.⁴⁷

(C) *Duty to Notify Master of Defect or Danger.*⁴⁸ Where a servant has knowledge or is chargeable with knowledge of defects which render his work dangerous, and fails to report such defects to the master in order that they may be remedied, he is guilty of such contributory negligence as will bar his right of recovery for injuries sustained by him by reason of such defects,⁴⁹ unless it is gerous defects, although furnished with tools to make repairs during trips. San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Lindsey, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 316, 65 S. W. 668.

Modglin, 85 Ill. 481 (in which the servant in charge knew of the approach of a train in time to have been off the track); Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Peterson, 32 Ill. App. 139 (failure of section man to keep lookout for extra, or "wild" trains); Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Goss, 13 Ill. App. 619 (in which plaintiff saw an approaching train, but tried to reach his destination ahead of it); Nelling v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 98 Iowa 554, 63 N. W. 568, 67 N. W. 404 (failure to look out for trains); Jolly v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 93 Mich. 370, 53 N. W. 526 (failure to look back for extra trains); Railway Co. v. Leech, 41 Ohio St. 388 (in which decedent, riding to his work on a hand-car, was killed by a passenger train an hour overdue. Neither he nor his foreman had reason to believe that the train had not passed, and they had not inquired at a telegraph station a mile away. But no negligence was shown on the part of those in charge of the train, and it was held that the company was not liable); International, etc., R. Co. v. McCarthy, 64 Tex. 632 (in which a road-master voluntarily entered a cut on a velocipede hand-car, knowing that a train was nearly due from the opposite direction); Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Hubert, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 54 S. W. 1074; Cooney v. Great Northern R. Co., 9 Wash. 292, 37 Pac. 438 (in which the headlight of a locomotive, moving at the rate of only three or four miles an hour, was in plain view for a mile and a half, and a collision could easily have been avoided by removing the hand-car from the track); Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Eason, 92 Fed. 553, 34 C. C. A. 530 (in which the servant saw the approaching train in ample time to get off the track). Compare Christianson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 67 Minn. 94, 69 N. W. 640; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 837, in which the servant was injured while moving a hand-car under the orders of his foreman, who was in a better position to see the approaching train, but gave no warning. Plaintiff saw the train, but thought the car could not be removed in time, and it was held that he was free from negligence.

When a running switch is to be made by a servant of a railroad company, he must try the switch, and see that there is nothing to prevent it from working properly, before signaling the engine to come ahead. Jarvis v. Drake, 97 Ill. App. 153.

(c) *Precautions Required of Servants on or Near Railroad Tracks.*⁷⁹

While the rule requiring travelers to look and listen when about to cross a railroad track is not applied in all its strictness to a workman engaged in the line of his duty on or near a railroad track,⁸⁰ the law holds him to the exercise of reasonable care and prudence proportioned to the dangers incident to his work and position to avoid injury to himself, and a failure in this regard resulting in injury to him

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 739.

Standing close to a train passing at the rate of thirty or forty miles an hour is contributory negligence. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Stassen, 56 Ill. App. 221. Compare Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cullen, 187 Ill. 523, 58 N. E. 455 [affirming 87 Ill. App. 374], in which a section foreman was held not to be guilty of negligence in failing to observe a defective car door which swung outward from a passing train, where he had stepped the customary distance from the track.

A motorman, on reaching a street crossing, is guilty of contributory negligence if he fails to look for an approaching car, and a collision results. Bobb v. Union Traction Co., 206 Pa. St. 265, 55 Atl. 972.

Sufficiency of precautions.—The fact that a servant, engaged in work on opposite sides of a side-track, once looked and listened before attempting to cross the track will not excuse him, if before crossing he allowed sufficient time to elapse for an engine to come into position where it would render it dangerous for him to cross, and he then attempted to cross without looking and listening. Pennsylvania Co. v. Mahoney, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. 469, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 366.

A custom of certain trains to use the main line at a station on all occasions does not excuse the station agent for failing to exercise ordinary care in walking on the side-track at the approach of trains, cannot recover for an injury resulting from his failure to see a train which it was his duty to observe.⁸³

d. Disobedience of Rules or Orders⁸³—(i) IN GENERAL. Where a servant is injured by reason of his disobedience of the rules or orders of his master, he is as a general rule guilty of such contributory negligence as to bar a recovery,⁸⁴ prothe station, knowing that one of such trains is approaching. Morehead v. Yazoo, etc., R. Co., 84 Miss. 112, 36 So. 151.

Unblocked frogs and switches.—For a brakeman, knowing that the frogs and switches are not blocked, to move over them while coupling and uncoupling cars, even in moving trains, without any thought of the frogs and guard-rails, or as to where he is stepping, is negligence contributing to the catching of his foot therein. Gillin v. Patten, etc., R. Co., 93 Me. 80, 44 Atl. 361.

If a servant has reason to believe that a train will be stopped before reaching him, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in stepping on the track, in the course of duty, in the way of a train backing toward him. Steele v. Central R. Co., 43 Iowa 109.

Where a section man stepped eighteen feet from the track, and was struck by a stone thrown by the fireman from the coal, he was not guilty of contributory negligence. Swartz v. Great Northern Co., 93 Minn. 339, 101 N. W. 504.

is unsafe,⁹² where no opportunity is given him to make a required inspection,⁹³ or where his failure to comply with the rule is caused by sickness.⁹⁴ So too a servant who disobeys a rule of the master in compliance with the instruction of the representative of the master on the spot is not guilty of contributory negligence.⁹⁵ But the mere assent of a superior servant to the violation of a rule by another servant will not excuse the latter,⁹⁶ and generally the violation of a rule by a superior servant does not excuse its violation by his inferior.⁹⁷ Nor is a servant excused for disobedience because he thinks compliance with a rule or order unnecessary,⁹⁸ because others whose business is well regulated are in the habit of conducting it in a manner contrary to his master's rules,⁹⁹ or because his violation of the rule was caused by the fault of other servants;¹ and the fact that an engineer is specially ordered to make a given distance in a certain time will not warrant his disobedience in approaching a station at a particular speed.²

(B) Customary Violation of Rules. Where a rule is habitually violated with the knowledge and acquiescence, either actual or imputed on the part of the master or those who are acting as his representatives, a servant will not be charged, as a matter of law, with contributory negligence in acting in disregard of it,³

(II) *COMMANDS INVOLVING VIOLATION OF RULES OR ORDERS.*¹⁵ Unless the danger is known and obvious,¹⁶ a servant will not be charged with contributory negligence in obeying an authorized command of his superior, even though it involves the violation of a rule or order of his master.¹⁷ But the mere assent or acquiescence of a superior servant to the violation of a rule or order by an inferior servant will not free the latter from negligence,¹⁸ unless he has acted in the usual and customary manner.¹⁹

(III) METHOD OF COMPLIANCE. The fact that a servant was injured while acting in obedience to orders will not relieve him of the charge of contributory negligence, unless he exercised reasonable care for his own safety.²⁰

g. Acts in Emergencies²¹—(i) IN GENERAL. Where a servant is injured as the result of an act done by him under an impulse or on a belief created by a sudden danger caused solely by the master's negligence, he is not to be regarded as guilty of contributory negligence, even though the act would be regarded as a negligent one if performed under circumstances not indicating sudden peril.²² If, however, the emergency in which the servant acts is of his own making, the Canada. The leading English case on this subject was decided in 1837,⁸⁰ and in 1841 the same conclusion was reached in a decision rendered by the supreme court of South Carolina.⁸¹ In 1842 the rule of the two decisions just mentioned was adopted and amplified by the supreme court of Massachusetts, in an opinion written by Chief Justice Shaw, and on account of the great learning and ability displayed by the justice this decision has taken rank as the leading American decision on the fellow servant doctrine.⁸²

2. BASIS OF RULE. The most usual ground assigned for the fellow servant doctrine is that the negligence of a fellow servant is one of the risks incident to the employment and assumed by the servant.⁸³ In the leading American decision it was said: "We are not aware of any principle which should except the perils arising from the carelessness and negligence of those who are in the same employment. These are perils which the servant is as likely to know, and against which he can as effectually guard, as the master. They are perils incident to the service, England.—Priestley v. Fowler, 1 Jur. 987, 7 L. J. Exch. 42, M. & H. 305, 3 M. & W. 1.

The rule had its origin in the idea that the employee has the means of knowing just as well as the employer all the ordinary risks incident to the service in which he is about to engage, and that these, including the perils that might arise from the negligence of other servants in the same business, enter into the contemplation of the parties in making the contract; on account of which, the law implies, the servant or employee has insisted upon a rate of compensation which would indemnify him for the hazards of the employment. And again the law supposes that the relation which the several employees sustain to each other, and the business in which they are engaged, would enable them better to guard against such risks and accidents than could the employer. Besides the moral effect of devolving these risks upon the employees themselves would be to induce a greater degree of caution, prudence, and fidelity than would in all probability be otherwise exercised by them. Sullivan v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 11 Iowa 421.

The rule rests not only upon the implied agreement to assume all the risks consequent upon the negligence of fellow servants, but, in the case of railway employees particularly, it is supported by considerations of a just and true public policy. The safety of the traveling public is largely dependent upon the care and skill with which railway employees discharge their responsible and perilous duties. The fact that such fellow servants must, as between themselves and the company, take upon themselves the results of the carelessness and negligence of a fellow servant, tends to quicken the zeal and

As to strangers, upon principles of public policy, the rule treats a master as guilty for the negligence of his servant, but public policy does not demand that he should be so treated as to his own servants, who have the option to examine their surroundings in their service, and to receive pay according to the risk they incur. They may sue a fellow servant for his negligence, but to make the master liable for it, unless that servant is taking the place of the master, is contrary to reason and justice. Hanna v. Granger, 18 R. I. 507, 28 Atl. 659.

37. Where servants of the same master are directly coöperating with each other in a particular business at the time of the injury, or are by their usual duties brought into habitual consociation, it may well be supposed that they have the power of influencing each other to the exercise of constant caution in the master's work (by their example, advice, and encouragement and by reporting delinquencies to the master) in as great, and in most cases in a greater, degree than the master. If then each servant knows that neither he nor his fellow servant, if injured by the others' negligence, can have redress against the master, he has such incentive to constant care, and such incentive to the exercise of his influence upon his fellow to incite him to constant care, that the well-being of society in such case does not demand that the master be made to answer. But although servants are employed by the same master, and are engaged in doing parts of some great work carried on by the master, still, unless either their duties are such that they usually bring about personal association between such servants, or unless they are actually coöperating at the time of the injury in the business in hand, or in the same line of employment, they have generally no power to incite each other to caution by counsel, exhortation, or example, or by reporting delinquencies to the master, and the well-being of society in such case must depend upon the devotion of the servant to the interests of the master, and the zeal of the master to promote a constant exercise of due care by his servant; and to bring these instrumentalities into action it becomes necessary, as in the case of an injury to a stranger, to adhere to the general rule that the master must answer for the neglect of his servant, and this, because the facts are such that society cannot, in such case, avail

3. WHO ARE FELLOW SERVANTS³⁸ — a. Definitions — (1) IN GENERAL. Who are fellow servants within the meaning of the rule has been a question of some diversity of decision, although the decided weight of authority is to the effect that all who serve the same master, work under the same control, deriving authority and compensation from the same source, and are engaged in the same general business, although it may be in different grades or departments of it, are fellow servants, each taking the risk of the other's negligence.³⁹

"The service must not only be under the same master, but the employment must be one having a common object. The most approved test of an employment of this character is whether the injured servant can be said to have apprehended the possibility of injury from another servant while engaged in the service for which he hires." *Ewan v. "Fellow servant" is a term meaning that where there are two servants or employees of a common master or employer, and one of them, from the negligent act of the other, receives injury, the master is not liable for the same. Jackson v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 43 W. Va. 380, 27 S. E. 278, 31 S. E. 258, 46 L. R. A. 337.

Employees working together under one common directing superior are fellow servants. Foster v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 115 Mo. 165, 21 S. W. 916.

All servants engaged in the prosecution of the same common work, without any dependence upon or relation to each other, except as co-laborers without rank under the direction and management of the master himself, or some servant placed by the master over them, are fellow servants. Moore v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 85 Mo. 588.

Difference in the amount of wages to servants does not affect the question as to whether they are fellow servants. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Hughes, 49 Miss. 258.

Employees having interest in business.—The captain of a steamboat, who is one of the owners, is not the fellow servant of a deck hand. Cook v. Parham, 24 Ala. 21. Compare Zeigler v. Day, 123 Mass. 152, holding that one to whom has been committed as superintendent the work of constructing a sewer, because of his skill and competency, is nevertheless a fellow servant of one employed in laying the sewer, although he is to receive one-half the profits as compensation for his work, where he has furnished no capital, is to share no losses, and to be responsible for no debts, and has no lien or interest in the stock or materials, or in the profits as profits.

Neither is a police officer (Kimball v. Boston, 1 Allen (Mass.) 417), nor a fireman (Palmer v. Portsmouth, 43 N. H. 265), a servant of the city which appoints him, in any such sense as to take away his right of action against it for an injury sustained by reason of a defective highway.

An employee of the state, injured while digging clay, and the captain of a boat be-

The rule is thus expressed by Lord Watson in Johnson v. Lindsay, [1891] App. Cas. 371, 382, 55 J. P. 644, 61 L. J. Q. B. 90, 65 L. T. Rep. N. S. 97, 40 Wkly. Rep. 405: "I can well conceive that the general servant of A. might, by working towards a common end along with the servants of B. and submitting himself to the control and orders of B., become pro hac vice B.'s servant, in such sense as not only to disable him from recovering from B. for injuries sustained through the fault of B.'s proper servants, but to exclude the liability of A. for injury occasioned, by his fault, to B.'s own workmen."

A person who is temporarily employed while in the general service of another must be treated as to that particular employment as the servant of the person thus employing him, and the person who has the right to direct and control his conduct in that particular business must likewise be regarded as his master, for the existence of a general relation of master and servant does not exclude a like relation between the servant and a third party, to the extent of the special service in which the servant may be actually engaged. Breslin v. Sparks, 97 N. Y. App. Div. 69, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 627.

To establish the fact that the servant of one has transferred his services to another pro hac vice, it must appear that he has assented expressly or impliedly to such transfer. No one could transfer the services of his servant to another master without the servant's consent. It must further appear that the servant has in fact entered upon the service and submitted himself to the direction and control of the new master. His assent may be established by direct proof that he agreed to accept the new master and to submit himself to his control, or by indirect proof of circumstances justifying the inference of such assent. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Hardy, 59 N. J. L. 35, 34 Atl. 986.

the principal, although they are engaged in a common work;⁴⁶ and the fact that the independent contractor instructs his foreman to obey the orders of the general superintendent of the principal does not make his employees and those of the latter fellow servants.⁴⁷ Where, however, the principal has control over the employees of the contractor and power to dismiss them, such employees become fellow servants with the employees of the principal.⁴⁸

An employee of a subcontractor and an employee of the original contractor are not fellow servants. Dale v. Hill-O'Meara Constr. Co., 108 Mo. App. 90, 82 S. W. 1092. The rights of a workman employed by a subcontractor in performing labor under a contract between a principal contractor and defendant for injuries caused by defendant's negligence are not affected by the provisions of a contract between the principal contractor and defendant in regard to accidents to workmen. Wagner v. Boston El. R. Co., 188 Mass. 437, 74 N. E. 919.

Contractor not employee of principal.—A contractor is not in any legal sense an employee of the person for whom he is working, and his employees do not stand in any such relation to the latter. Young v. New York Cent. R. Co., 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 229.

(iii) VOLUNTEERS. One who, having no interest in the work, voluntarily assists the servant of another cannot recover from the master for an injury caused by the negligence or misconduct of such servant, since he can impose no greater duty on the master than a hired servant.⁵⁰

(iv) PERSONS ASSISTING MASTER'S SERVANTS AT THEIR REQUEST. In some cases it has been held that where a person assists the servant of another at his request, and is injured by reason of the negligence of such servant or of another in the same common employment, he does not become a servant of the master, so as to relieve the latter from liability on the ground that his injuries were caused by the negligence of a fellow servant.⁵¹ In other cases, however, it is held that the servant cannot by any act of his impose a higher liability on the master than the latter was under to himself, and that the person rendering assistance in the service of the master at the request of his servant can have no other or different remedy against the master than the servant himself had. His position is that of a volunteer;⁵² but viewing him as an employer, at the request of the servant, the relation itself would destroy his right of action.⁵³

(v) PERSON ACTING IN PLACE OF SERVANT. Where one servant acts in the place of, or as a substitute for, another, he stands in the same relation to the other servants of the master as the servant in whose place he is acting — if the latter is a fellow servant, he is a fellow servant,⁵⁴ and vice versa.⁵⁵ So too a substitute hired by an employee stands in the employee's place, with all of its responsibilities and liabilities, so far as the master is concerned, and a fellow servant of the employee is a fellow servant of the substitute, although no contractual relation exists between the substitute and the master, and the employee is alone responsible for the substitute's wages.⁵⁶

(vi) SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT. Where servants are engaged in the same common employment, the fact that one of them is acting outside of the line of his regular duties at the time of the negligence complained of will not affect the master's liability.⁵⁷ But the negligence of a fellow servant in omitting to perform

Temporary assignment to new duties.—Where an employee, engaged for a particular service, is temporarily assigned to new and different duties, with the intention that he shall resume his former duties as soon as the new service is performed, his new associates

some act will not relieve the master of liability for an injury to an employee caused thereby, unless it was especially made the duty of the fellow servant to perform the act, although he may have been in the habit of sometimes performing it voluntarily, and without special instructions.⁵⁸

(vii) SERVANT NOT ON DUTY—(A) In General. As a general rule a servant not on duty is not a fellow servant of those engaged in the same common employment, so as to relieve the master from liability to him for injuries resulting from their negligence.⁵⁹ It has been held, however, that where the servant of a railroad company, when not on duty, occupies a building or car furnished by the company, his relation to the other employees of the company is not changed by reason of the fact that he was not actually on duty when injured.⁶⁰

(B) Going To and From Work. In a number of cases servants on their way to and from work have been held, although not actually on duty, to be fellow servants of other employees of the master engaged in the same common employment so as to relieve him of liability for injuries received by them through the negligence of such other employees.⁶¹ This rule has been most frequently applied in the case of servants riding to and from work on the master's trains or other conveyances;⁶² but other cases hold that an employee in such a situation is not a fellow servant of other employees of the master so as to exonerate him from lia-become fellow servants for the time being. McGrath v. Coal Co., 4 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 281.

Act in disobedience of orders.—If the owner of a mine has negligently allowed fire damp to accumulate, and it is ignited by a servant who goes into it with a lighted lamp, instead of a safety lamp, contrary to the owner's orders, and another servant is injured by an explosion, the latter has no remedy against the master. *Berns v. sufficient capacity to take care of himself and knows and can properly appreciate the risk.⁶⁶

(B) Application to Persons Compelled to Serve. The fellow servant doctrine does not apply to persons in compulsory service.⁶⁷

(C) Application to Corporations. The rule that a master is not liable to a servant for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, where the master himself is not at fault, is applicable to corporations as well as to individuals employing servants.⁶⁸

(D) Unlawful Employment or Services. The rule that a master is not liable for an injury caused to his servant by a fellow servant is in no way affected by the fact that both servants at the time of the accident were illegally employed, the day being Sunday.⁶⁹ On the other hand, an action by a railway employee for injuries received from being struck by a train running at a prohibited rate of speed will not be defeated because the train was in charge of co-employees, where they were running the train pursuant to a time card prepared and promulgated by the company.⁷⁰

(E) What Law Governs. In an action for negligence resulting in injuries to a servant the application of the rule as to fellow servants depends on the law of the place where the cause of action arose, and not on the lex fori,⁷¹ provided, however, that such law does not conflict with the public policy of the latter state.⁷²

(II) AS DEPENDENT UPON NUMBER AND SUPERVISION OF SERVANTS—(A) In General. A master may himself superintend the work at which his servants are engaged, and need not employ a competent superintendent, if he is himself competent to oversee and direct the work, having regard for the safety of his employees.⁷³

(B) Duty to Employ Sufficient Force—(1) IN GENERAL. The obligation of a master to furnish reasonably safe instrumentalities for the performance of his work⁷⁴ embraces the obligation to provide a sufficient number of servants to perform the work safely, and the fellow servant doctrine cannot be invoked to defeat a recovery for injuries due to his neglect of such duty,⁷⁵ unless the injured servant might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have known the danger of undertaking the work with the force furnished.⁷⁶

(2) USUAL AND CUSTOMARY NUMBER. It is the duty of a master to furnish such number of competent servants as is usual and customary in his business,⁷⁷ and where he does this he cannot as a rule be charged with negligence.⁷⁸

(3) ABSENCE OR FAILURE TO APPEAR. Where a master has furnished a sufficient number of servants, the absence of one of them from his post of duty without the master's knowledge and consent will not render him liable for injuries caused by reason of such absence,⁷⁹ unless the servant who absents himself occupies the position of a vice-principal.⁸⁰ But the mere fact that the master has hired the necessary number of servants will not relieve him from liability where, upon the failure of a part of them to appear, he undertakes the work with an insufficient number.⁸¹

(c) Supervision and Direction. It is the duty of a master, either himself or through a vice-principal, to exercise such general supervision and direction over his servants as will render the conduct of his business reasonably safe to his employees.⁸² The rule, however, does not require the protection of employees from the negligence of a fellow servant, or extend to obvious dangers.⁸³

(d) Proximate Cause of Injury. In order to prevent the application of the fellow servant doctrine, and to hold the master liable for injuries alleged to have been caused by reason of the absence of a sufficient number of servants, or through the master's failure to exercise a proper supervision and direction over them, the master's negligence must have been the proximate cause of the injury.⁸⁴

(III) COMPETENCY OF SERVANTS⁸⁵—(A) Rule Stated. The master is bound to the exercise of due care and diligence in the selection and employment of his servants, and if a servant sustains injuries through the incompetence of a fellow managed, or to their particular location or surroundings, or to peculiar circumstances which in any given instance would tend to illustrate the diligence or negligence of a company in guarding or failing to guard its switches, was inadmissible.

Guarding uncovered trenches.—Evidence of what is usually done at other places, and under different circumstances, as to guarding uncovered trenches, is properly excluded in an action for injuries caused by defendant's negligence in failing to place a watchman at an uncovered trench in which plaintiff was working. Craven v. Mayers, 165 Mass. 271, 42 N. E. 1131.

Canada.—Baird v. Dunn, 33 N. Brunsw. 156.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 334.

Want of license as evidence of master's negligence.—Under Ala. Acts (1886-1887), p. 100, §§ 1, 2, requiring locomotive engineers to be licensed where they "operate or drive an engine upon the main line or road-bed of any railroad in this State," and not otherwise, the fact that an engineer had no license does not tend to show negligence on the part of the railroad company, where the accident occurred in a freight yard, in the use of a yard engine, and the engineer was employed only for yard work. Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Askew, 90 Ala. 5, 7 So. 823.

Effect of license or certificate.—Possession of diploma or license is not sufficient evidence of competency. Richardson v. Carbon Hill Coal Co., 6 Wash. 52, 32 Pac. 1012, 20 L. R. A. 338. Although a license may be prima facie evidence of competency it will not authorize retention of such servant after notice of his habitual and gross negligence. Walker v. Bolling, 22 Ala. 294.

Complaint and promise of removal.—A switchman who has complained of the incompetency of a fireman and received a promise that he should be removed cannot be held to have looked so intently at the fireman on the engine, when afterward signaling to him, as to have identified him as the same person. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Eckles, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 179, 60 S. W. 830.

A servant's general reputation for recklessness is not alone sufficient to charge a fellow servant, injured by such recklessness, with knowledge thereof. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 90 Tex. 304, 38 S. W. 520.

injuries to another servant caused thereby necessarily depends upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case.⁹¹

(2) INEXPERIENCE OR YOUTH. The mere fact that a servant is inexperienced in the particular work in which he is employed,⁹² or is youthful,⁹³ is not of itself sufficient to charge the master with negligence. But the youth of a servant may be considered on the question of his competency to do the work assigned him;⁹⁴ and where the nature of a servant's work is such as to require experience for its reasonably safe performance, his inexperience is sufficient to show his incompetency.⁹⁵

(3) PHYSICAL DISABILITY. The fact that a servant is physically disabled to perform his duties is sufficient to charge the master with negligence in employing him.⁹⁶ Nevertheless the fact that a railroad engineer is near-sighted,⁹⁷ or that

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 335.

91. "Incompetency exists not alone in physical or mental attributes, but in the disposition with which a servant performs his duties. If he habitually neglects these duties, he becomes unreliable, and although he may be physically and mentally able to do well all that is required of him, his disposition toward his work and toward the general safety of the work of his employer and to his fellow-servants makes him an incompetent man." Coppins v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 122 N. Y. 557, 564, 25 N. E. 915, 19 Am. St. Rep. 523 [affirmed 48 Hun 292].

A single act of negligence by a servant resulting in injury to a fellow servant is not of itself sufficient to show incompetency, so as to make the master liable. *Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. H. 629, 44 Atl. 104, holding that a servant injured by the negligence of a fellow servant, when the latter was a competent and ordinarily careful servant, cannot recover from the master.

Railroad engineers.—While a railroad company is bound to furnish competent engineers and firemen, it is not required to furnish the best that can be secured. Lyttle v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 84 Mich. 289, 47 N. W. 571.

The incompetency of a locomotive engineer may consist of a disregard of signals, or disobedience of the orders of other employees having authority to direct the movements of the engine. Sizer v. Syracuse, etc., R. Co., 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 67.

Unlicensed engineer.—The mere fact that a master employs an unlicensed engineer to run his boiler does not render him liable to his other servants for injuries caused by the explosion of the boiler. Birmingham v. Pettit, 21 D. C. 209.

he has the use of only one eye,⁹⁸ does not prove him an improper person for the duty.

(D) Temporary Substitution of One Servant For Another. The temporary substitution of an unskilled for a competent servant by the master or an authorized agent, whereby a fellow servant is injured, is actionable negligence.⁹⁹

(E) Incompetency After Employment. The continuance by a master of an incompetent servant in his employment, whereby another servant is injured, is as much a breach of duty and a ground of liability as the original employment of an incompetent servant,¹ provided the master has notice of such incompetency.² But where a servant is skilled when employed, the master has a right to rely upon the presumption that he will continue careful and skilful, and, when notified that he has become careless, he is not ordinarily bound to discharge him without an investigation, unless such notice is accompanied by evidence which leaves no reasonable doubt as to the truth of the charge.³

(F) Master's Knowledge of Incompetency—(1) IN GENERAL. The mere incompetency of a fellow servant is insufficient to render the master liable for his negligent acts, in the absence of a showing that the master knew or should have known of such incompetency, and was guilty of negligence in employing him, or in retaining him in the service.⁴ But the master must use reasonable diligence

Operation of engine by experienced fireman.—The action of an engineer on a switch engine in permitting the engine to be operated under his direction by his fireman, who had nearly two years' experience at the work, and who had been accustomed to handle the engine, is not such negligence as will enable a fellow servant to recover from the railroad company for injuries sustained in coupling a car to the engine while so operated. *Thompson v. in determining the competency of his servants,⁵ and if he does or ought to know that a servant is incompetent, he is liable for injuries occasioned by such incompetency,⁶ if he has been guilty of negligence in retaining the servant after acquiring such knowledge.⁷ Where a servant is injured through the incompetency and negligence of a vice-principal, he can recover from the master, whether the latter knew of such incompetency and negligence or not.⁸

(2) CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE—(a) IN GENERAL. Actual knowledge on the part of the master of the incompetency of a servant through whose acts another servant sustained injury is not indispensable to the injured servant's right of recovery. The master cannot screen himself from liability upon the ground that he did not know of the incompetency of the servant whose negligence caused the injury, if he might have known it by the exercise of reasonable care and caution.⁹

selection of a servant, mere proof of his reputation for recklessness and carelessness is insufficient, without also proving that he was in fact reckless and careless;¹³ and it has been held that a master cannot be charged with his servant's negligence by showing his general reputation for incompetency, without reference to any specific acts of negligence showing that the master knew or ought to have known that the servant was incompetent to perform his particular duties.¹⁴

bb. Drinking Habits. Where an injury results from a fellow servant's intoxication,¹⁵ the master is chargeable with notice of his excessive use of intoxicating liquors, if it has existed so long that a failure to learn of it is negligence.¹⁶ But occasionally taking a drink or occasionally being under the influence of drink does not constitute such a habit of drinking as would authorize a finding that a servant was rendered incompetent thereby;¹⁷ and even the fact that a servant is a habitual drunkard does not necessarily show incompetency where he is not shown to have been drunk at the time of the accident.¹⁸

Defect brought about by fellow servant.—A servant charged with the duty of working machinery with another servant is not a fellow servant of the latter in such sense as to relieve the master from responsibility for an injury which happens through a defect in the machinery, although that defect may have been brought about by the negligence of the other servant. McDade v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 5 Mackey (D. C.) 144.

The master's presence when a servant is injured by the negligent act of a fellow servant does not make him liable for the injury unless he knew, or ought to have known, the facts that made the act dangerous. sustained but for his negligence,²⁷ the master is liable, even though it might have been prevented by the exercise of greater care on the part of the fellow servant;²⁸ nor will the fact that the master's negligence was slight as compared with that of the fellow servant defeat a recovery.²⁹ Where, however, the negligence of the servant is such as to have caused the injury even had the master not been negligent, then the servant's negligence is the sole cause of the injury, and the master is not liable.³⁰

(v) GROSS OR WILFUL NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANTS. Unless so provided by statute,³¹ a master is not liable for the gross or wilful negligence of a fellow servant.³² In Kentucky, however, the master is held liable where the negligent fellow servant stands in a position of superiority to the servant injured,³³ but not otherwise.³⁴ What, in a given case, will constitute wilful or gross negligence necessarily depends upon its peculiar facts and circumstances.³⁵

(VI) *SUPERIOR SERVANTS*³⁶ — (A) General Considerations. In some of the states the rule that a servant because of his rank may be a vice-principal seems to be repudiated in toto;³⁷ but in most of the states it is held that an agent to whom is intrusted the entire management of the master's business, or the management of a separate and distinct department, is a vice-principal and not a fellow servant.³⁸ Closely allied to this rule is the so-called "superior servant" doctrine adopted in some of the states, under which a servant given the power to control other servants is not their fellow servant, where his negligence in the exercise of such control is the cause of the injury to the inferior servant.³⁹ Whether a case holding that certain employees are not fellow servants is based on the one rule or the other is oftentimes difficult to determine because of the absence of any fixed rule as to who is the head of the department as distinguished from a mere superior servant. For instance, in some of the states which have expressly repudiated the superior servant doctrine, a superior servant has been held a vice-principal because of his rank, although he was no more the head of a department than any other employee having power to employ and control a gang of workmen.

(B) Servant Having Power of Control — (1) IN GENERAL. The question whether a foreman or other superior servant who is not the head of a department, such as a section foreman on a railroad, is a vice-principal, while it may depend on whether he is exercising some non-delegable duty of the master, is oftentimes determined merely from his rank, so that its solution depends upon whether in the particular state the superior servant rule is followed. The superior servant rule as distinguished from the general manager and head of department rule seems to have been first adopted in this country in Ohio.⁴⁰ A suggested basis for the rule is that the duty of using reasonable care in giving orders to servants is one of those obligations which the master cannot delegate so as to absolve himself from liability for their non-performance or improper performance.⁴¹ In other cases the duty of the inferior servant to obey his superior servant seems to be the controlling idea.⁴²

(2) STATES IN WHICH RULE HAS BEEN ADOPTED. With more or less qualification the superior servant doctrine is clearly the law in the states of Illinois,⁴³

"In exercising this power he does not stand upon the same plane with those under his control. His position is one of superiority. When he gives an order within the scope of his authority, if not manifestly unreasonable, those under his charge are bound to obey, at the peril of losing their situations, and such commands are, in contemplation of law, the commands of the company, and hence it is held responsible for the consequences." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288, 299.

43. Fraser v. Schroeder, 163 Ill. 459, 45 N. E. 288 [affirming 60 Ill. App. 519]; West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 162 Ill. 482, 44 N. E. 815 [affirming 57 Ill. App. 440] (holding that whether the starter of a street railway was a superior servant of a gripman was a question of fact for the jury); Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Surralls, 115 Ill. App. 615; Driscoll v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 97 Ill. App. 668; Chicago Dredging, etc., Co. v. McMahon, 30 Ill. App. 358; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Blank, 24 Ill. App. 438.

The injury must result from the negligence of the superior servant acting as such through obedience to his orders. In this respect the rule is different from the rule in Ohio. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288.

Acting in part as common laborer.—The mere fact that the servant exercising such authority sometimes or generally labors with the others as a common hand will not of itself exonerate the master from liability for the former's negligence in the exercise of his authority over the others. Negligence must be gross.—In this state there is a limitation of the rule which is not adopted in any other state, in that the master is liable for an injury to a subordinate resulting from the gross negligence of the superior, but not for an injury resulting from ordinary negligence. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Palmer, 98 Ky. 382, 33 S. W. 199, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 998; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Elliott, 82 S. W. 374, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 669; Kentucky Distilleries, etc., Co. v. Gross negligence is the failure to use such care as careless and inattentive persons usually exercise under like circumstances. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 59 S. W. 13, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 878.

Subordinate foreman.—It is immaterial that a superior servant himself was subject to the orders of another while engaged in the work in hand. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Elliott, 82 S. W. 374, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 669.

Authority from master.—The master cannot be charged with the negligence of a servant directing another, where the former was not acting under authority of the master or of any one standing in the master's place. Toomey v. Avery Stamping Co., 20 Ohio Cir. Ct. 183, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 216. The fact that employees have allowed one of their number, on account of his age, to direct the work does not constitute him a foreman of the parties, or render the employer liable for injury resulting from such employee's negligence. Hartman v. Kloeppinger, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. 433, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 393.

49. Ohio River, etc., R. Co. v. Edwards, 111 Tenn. 31, 76 S. W. 897; Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. Lawson, 101 Tenn. 406, 47 S. W. 489; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Bowler, 9 Heisk. The injured servant must be under the control of the negligent servant to make the master liable. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Wheelless, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 741, 43 Am. Rep. 317.

Merely calling one a foreman does not show that he is a vice-principal. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Lahr, 86 Tenn. 335, 6 S. W. 663.

Who is superior servant.—A stationary engineer, engaged in the same service with the injured servant, is not per se a superior servant for whose negligence the master is liable. Dana v. Blackburn, 90 S. W. 237, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 695. The mere fact that a co-servant was accustomed to give signals for the starting of cars does not make him a superior servant. Dana v. Blackburn, 90 S. W. 237, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 695.

50. Bering Mfg. Co. v. Femelat, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 36, 79 S. W. 869.

Power to employ and discharge.—In this state the rule is different from that in any other state in that a superior servant is a fellow servant unless he has the power to employ and discharge the injured servant. See infra, IV, G, 4, a, (vi), (d).

Non-delegable duty.—Of course a foreman may be a vice-principal because of the duty being a non-delegable one of the master, al-

Utah.⁵¹ In several other states the superior servant rule seems to have been adopted, although it has not been applied in all cases.⁵² In Missouri the rule was apparently rejected in the earlier cases,⁵³ was afterward adopted,⁵⁴ and now seems to be repudiated again.⁵⁵ It should be noticed, however, as will be stated hereafter, that even in those states which adopt the superior servant rule there is a difference of opinion as to the extent thereof, in that some of the states, such as Illinois, restrict the liability of the master to injuries resulting from obedience to the orders of the superior servant or from the acts of the superior servant while acting as such,⁵⁶ while in other states the master is held liable in all cases where the negligence was that of the superior servant with the right to control, although the injury was the result of the negligence of the superior servant while acting other than in his official capacity;⁵⁷ that is, the dual capacity doctrine is recognized in some of the states and not in others. Where a servant is ordered by another employee having the power to control him as to his work to do work outside the scope of his employment, the rule of fellow servants does not apply.⁵⁸

A foreman of a gang with power to hire and discharge and direct when, where, and how to do municipal sewer construction work is not a general vice-principal where such foreman is appointed by the superintendent of sewer construction and said superintendent is under the city engineer who is declared by the charter to be the general superintendent of all work done by the city in the streets. Minneapolis v. Lundin, 58 Fed. 525, 7 C. C. A. 344.

Complete relinquishment of control.—To constitute one a vice-principal the master must have committed to him the virtual and substantial control of the business, and the power to do all acts necessary to its conduct. Willis v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 11 Oreg. 257, 4 Pac. 121. It is only where the master withdraws from the management of the business, intrusting it to a middleman or superior servant, or where, as in case of a corporation, the business is of such a nature that the general management and control thereof is necessarily committed to agents, that the master can be held liable to a subordinate for the negligent acts of one thus acting in his stead. Malone v. Hathaway, 64 N. Y. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 573 [reversing 3 Hun 553, 6 Thomps. & C. 1]. The master must confer on the manager the absolute management, exercising no discretion as to the conduct of his business except in providing safe rules and a safe place to work. Ruemmeli-Braun Co. v. Cahill, 14 Okla. 422, 79 Pac. 260.

The non-residence of the master, while possibly a point to be considered (Whaley v. Bartlett, 42 S. C. 454, 20 S. E. 745), does not of itself make his foreman a vice-principal (Hoth v. Peters, 55 Wis. 405, 13 N. W. 219).

Erection of buildings or structures.—Where a master employs a builder to take sole charge and management of the work of building a house, bridge, or other structure, and places other employees under him and subject to his orders, such superintending employee is not a fellow servant with those under him. Foreman of work train as head of department.—A foreman in charge of a work train used on but a few miles of the road, and directing a gang of men as conductor of the train, and himself engaging in the work, is not a vice-principal or head of a department of a railroad company, for whose negligence the company is liable. *Thom v. A sawyer in charge of a sawmill is a vice-principal. Evans v. Louisiana Lumber Co., 111 La. 534, 35 So. 736; Dossett v. St. Paul, etc., Lumber Co., 40 Wash. 276, 82 Pac. 273. See also Hendricks v. Lesure Lumber Co., 92 Minn. 318, 99 N. W. 1125, 100 N. W. 638.

What constitutes a department.—It has always been found to be difficult, if not impossible, to describe a department in language which will fit all cases, and furnish a sure test by which to determine in every instance if the person in charge of what is claimed to be a department is so in fact, and for that reason is a vice-principal, or is merely a fellow servant. Much depends of course upon the magnitude and character of the work that is done in that subdivision of the business which one has been appointed to superintend, and upon the further question whether the work is of such a nature as requires intelligent and careful supervision on the part of the master. Chicago House Wrecking Co. v. Birney, 117 Fed. 72, 54 C. C. A. 458. A person in control and management of a distinct department is to be distinguished from one in charge of a mere separate piece of work in one of the branches of service in a department. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 16 S. Ct. 843, 40 L. ed. 994. "Thus, between the law department of a railway corporation and the operating department, there is a natural and distinct separation, one which makes the two departments, like two independent kinds of business, in which the one employer and master is engaged. So, oftentimes there is in the affairs of such corporation what may be called a manufacturing or repair department, and another strictly operating department; these two departments are, in their relations to each other, as distinct and separate as though the work of each was carried on by a separate corporation. And from this natural separation flows the rule that he who is placed in charge of such separate branch of the service, who alone superintends and has the control of it, is as to it in the place of the master. But this is a very different proposition from that which affirms that each separate piece of work in one of these branches of service is a distinct department, and gives to the individual having control of that piece of work the position of vice principal or representative of the master." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 383, 13 S. Ct. 914, 37 L. ed. 772. One subject to the control of a superior in the same department is not a superintendent in such department so as to make him a vice-principal. Ruemmeli-Braun Co. v. Cahill, 14 Okla. 422, 79 Pac. 260. An employee is not a vice-principal where he is simply charged with special duties, performing them under the direction of the master or under the control of superior officers. Malone v. Hathaway, 64 N. Y. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 573; Brown v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 2 Del. Co. (Pa.) 155.

Orders given to intermediate servant.—Where work is done under the express direction of a superintendent who is in no sense a fellow servant of the person injured, the fact that directions by the superintendent as to the manner in which the work was to be done were directly to the foreman in the immediate charge of the work does not change the relation between the superintendent and the injured servant. Donahoe v. Kansas City, 136 Mo. 657, 38 S. W. 571. See also Beeson v. Green Mountain Gold Min. Co., 57 Cal. 20.

Municipal employees.—This rule applies equally well to municipal employees. Augusta v. Owens, 111 Ga. 464, 36 S. E. 830; Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 24, 29 N. W. 565; *Adams v. (D) Power to Hire and Discharge. While the power to hire and discharge is usually enumerated as a circumstance worthy of consideration in determining whether a servant because of his rank is a vice-principal,⁷⁶ yet the general rule is that the mere power to hire and discharge does not make a servant a vice-principal,⁷⁷ except as respects the discharge of the non-delegable duty of selecting competent and careful servants;⁷⁸ while on the other hand a servant may be a vice-principal, although he has no power to hire and discharge.⁷⁹ In Texas, however, it is well settled that a superior servant is not a vice-principal unless he has the power to hire and discharge the party injured by the negligence,⁸⁰ except in so far as the liability is based on the non-delegable duty of selecting competent servants.⁸¹

(E) "Dual Capacity" Doctrine. Conceding that a servant is a vice-principal because of his rank, either as one merely given the power to control employees under him or a general manager or head of a department, the master is not always liable for his negligence resulting in an injury to another servant. In most of the states which adopt either the superior servant rule or the general manager and head of department rule, the so-called "dual capacity" doctrine is in force, under which the master is liable for what may be called the official acts of the superior servant resulting in the injury for which suit is brought, but not for his acts, such as assisting in manual labor, which are not within his duties, but which are the duty of inferior servants under his control.⁸² In some states, however, the Illinois.—The mere fact that one of a number of servants who are in the habit of working together in the same line of employment, for a common master, has power to control and direct the actions of the others with respect to such employment, will not of itself render the master liable for the negligence of the governing servant resulting in the injury to one of the others, without regard to other circumstances. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288. Every case in this respect must depend upon its own circumstances. William Graver Tank Works v. O'Donnell, 191 Ill. 236, 60 N. E. 831 [affirming 91 Ill. App. 524]; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. May, supra; St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Fleischbein, 109 Ill. App. 509 [affirmed in 207 Ill. 593, 69 N. E. 963]. If the negligence complained of consists of some act done or omitted by one having such authority, which relates to his duty as a common laborer with those under his control and which might just as readily have happened with one of them having no such authority, the master is not liable. Gall v. Beckstein, 173 Ill. 187, 50 N. E. 711; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. May, supra; Decatur Cereal Mill Co. v. Gogerty, 90 Ill. App. 632; Chicago Architectural Iron Works v. Nagel, 80 Ill. App. 492; Fitzgerald v. Honkomp, 44 Ill. App. 365. See Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. v. Skola, 83 Ill. App. 659 [affirmed in 183 Ill. 454, 56 N. E. 171, 75 Am. St. Rep. 120]. If the injury results from obeying orders of the foreman or other superior servant given in the exercise of his authority, the master is liable (Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Atwell, 198 Ill. 200, 64 N. E. 1095 [affirming 100 Ill. App. 513]; La Salle v. Kostka, 190 Ill. 130, 60 N. E. 72 [affirming 92 Ill. App. 91]; Libby v. Scherman, 146 Ill. 540, 34 N. E. 801, 37 Am. St. Rep. 191; Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Hawk, 121 Ill. 259, 12 N. E. 253, 2 Am. St. Rep. 82; Leighton, etc., Steel Co. v. Snell, 119 Ill. App. 199 [affirmed in 217 Ill. 152, 75 N. E. 462]; Illinois Steel Co. v. Sitar, 98 Ill. App. 470); and the fact that the former at the time of the injury is temporarily acting as co-laborer with the injured servant does not necessarily relieve the master from liability, upon the ground that they were servants of one common master (St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Fleischbein 207 Ill. 593, 69 N. E. 963 [affirming 109 Ill. App. 509]; William Graver Tank Works v. O'Donnell, supra; Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. v. Skola, 183 Ill. 454, 56 N. E. 171, 75 Am. St. Rep. 120; Offutt v. World's Columbian Exposition, 175 Ill. 472, 51 N. E. 651; Pittsburg Bridge Co. v. Walker, 170 Ill. 550, 48 N. E. 915 [affirming 70 Ill. App. 55]; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. May, supra; Illinois Southern R. Co. v. Marshall, 112 Ill. App. 514 [affirmed in 210 Ill. 562, 71 N. E. 597, 66 L. R. A. 297]; Chicago v. Cronin, 91 Ill. App. 466; Braun v. Conrad Seipp Brewing Co., 72 Ill. App. 232. See also Leiter v. Kinnare, 68 Ill. App. 558. On the other hand, if the injury results from the negligence of a foreman or other su-doctrine is either expressly repudiated or not fully recognized and the master is held liable without regard to the nature or the quality of the negligent act of the vice-principal.⁸³ Where the employer himself assumes control and gives an express order not only what to do but how to do it, a vice-principal becomes for the time being a mere co-employee, whatever his general authority under other circumstances.⁸⁴

perior servant, but is not connected with orders given by the foreman to the injured servant in the particular instance, they are fellow servants and the master is not liable. *Chicago, etc., R. (F) Acts Outside Scope of Superior Servant's Authority. The master is not liable for the negligence of a vice-principal who is such because of his rank where the act is outside of the scope of his authority or agency.⁸⁵

(G) Actual Rather Than Apparent Authority as Test. The fact that the injured servant believed a negligent servant to be a vice-principal and was ignorant of his discharge as foreman does not make the master liable.⁸⁶ And a fellow servant cannot, without his master's knowledge, by assumption of authority, convert himself into a vice-principal.⁸⁷

(H) Temporary Vice-Principal. An employee who is temporarily occupying the position of one who is a vice-principal is for the time being himself a vice-principal.⁸⁸ Of course the master is not liable unless, at the time of the injury, the substitute was invested with the powers conferred upon the vice-principal whose place he has taken.⁸⁹

(VII) AS DETERMINED BY CHARACTER OF NEGLIGENT ACT—(A) General Considerations. Whether the master is an individual or a corporation,⁹⁰ the rule is that personal duties of a master cannot be delegated by him to a servant so as to relieve himself from liability on the ground that the negligence in regard thereto was that of a fellow servant.⁹¹ A fortiori the master cannot escape

Securing ferocious animals.—The fact that the injuries inflicted by a ferocious dog occurred through the negligence of a co-servant in omitting to chain him up does not preclude a recovery from the master. Muller v. McKesson, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 44 [affirmed in 73 N. Y. 195, 29 Am. Rep. 123].

Effect as making notice to servant notice to master.—Where a master delegates the performance of his own primary or positive duty to another, notice to the latter with respect to the non-performance of such duty is, no matter what his rank, notice to the master. Merrill v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 29 Utah 264, 81 Pac. 85, 110 Am. St. Rep. 695.

Custody of dangerous instruments.—An employee who is given charge of dangerous instruments, such as dynamite, represents his master in the care and custody thereof, and is not a fellow servant, and hence the master is liable for injuries to employees through negligence in the care of such articles. Rush v. Spokane Falls, etc., R. Co., 23 Wash. 501, 63 Pac. 500.

Exposure of injured servant.—A master who, after a servant was injured, undertook to take him to his home, is liable where, through the negligence of fellow servants, he was exposed, in consequence of which complications set in, causing his death. Bresnahan v. Lonsdale Co., (R. I. 1900) 51 Atl. 624.

Delegation of duty by manager to servant.—Where the duty is a personal one of the master, it is not discharged by the act of a superior servant in directing an inferior servant to perform the duty unless the latter diligently performed it. Hough v. Grants Pass Power Co., 41 Oreg. 531, 69 Pac. 655.

Statutory limitation as to hours of work.—A breach of a statute providing that a railroad company shall not permit or require an engineer, fireman, etc., who had worked for twenty-four hours to go again on duty or perform any kind of work until he has had at least eight hours' rest gives a cause of action to any other servant injured by reason of its violation. Pelin v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. App. Div. 71, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 468.

Violation of ordinance.—A railroad company cannot avoid liability for injuries to an employee caused by its negligence in operating a train in violation of a valid city ordinance on the grounds that the injured party and the persons in charge of the train were fellow servants. The running of the business, with and in pursuance of the plans, appliances, helps, and helpers thus provided, in other words, the execution of the work, is of the assignable sort, rendering all persons engaged therein fellow servants, so that, if the master used due care in selecting his servants, he will not be responsible to one for an injury produced by the negligence or other default of another. Bishop Noncont. L. § 665 [cited in Molique v. Iowa Gold, etc., Co., 18 Colo. App. 223, 71 Pac. 427].

Negligence in carrying out the orders of a master generally relates to a detail of the work for which the master is not liable. Whalen v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 114 Mich. 512, 72 N. W. 323; Ryan v. McCully, 123 Mo. 636, 27 S. W. 533; Foster v. International Paper Co., 183 N. Y. 45, 75 N. E. 933; Hussey v. Cogger, 112 N. Y. 614, 20 N. E. 556, 8 Am. St. Rep. 787, 3 L. R. A. 559; Martin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 65 Fed. 384.

The removal of rock from the edge of a cliff or from the side is a mere detail of the work which the master is not required to perform personally, so that where a servant is directed by a foreman to do such work and is injured by the falling of a piece of rock which had been thrown and lodged on the top of the cliff during blasting the master is not liable. Di Vito v. Crage, 165 N. Y. 378, 59 N. E. 141 [reversing 55 N. Y. Suppl. 64]; Perry v. Rogers, 157 N. Y. 251, 51 N. E. 1021.

Putting servant in dangerous place.—The fact that a foreman put a servant in a dangerous place is not a matter affecting the master if the danger arises out of the manner of performing the details of the work. Ulrich v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 25 N. Y. App. Div. 465, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 5.

Omissions to act in exercise of discretion.—If, in the exercise of judgment by the master's representative, he omits to do something, which has been foreseen and provided against by the master, the latter should not be regarded as chargeable with a responsibility for the result. Vogel v. American Bridge Co., 180 N. Y. 373, 73 N. E. 1, 70 L. R. A. 725.

The mere handling of trains and cars upon its road or yards the company may commit to its employees, and in respect to such work it does not owe its employees the duty of seeing that cars are safely handled, or that no servant is negligent, and it is not liable in such cases to one employee for the negligence of the other, so long as it has performed its duty in the employment of the latter, or in the work,⁹⁸ notwithstanding the rule that the line of demarcation between the absolute duty of the master and the duty of the servants is the line that separates the work of construction, preparation, and preservation, from the work of operation.⁹⁹ If the specific act which is the subject of the suit is one which can be properly regarded as within the personal duty of the master, he is liable without regard to whether it is an act of negligent performance or one of omission.¹

(B) Dual Capacity. A servant may sustain a dual relation toward the other servants, in that he is a vice-principal as to those duties delegated to him for the due performance of which the master cannot relieve himself from liability, while he is a mere fellow servant in reference to those acts in the performance of the work not within the personal duties of the master.²

(c) *Safe Place to Work*³—(1) IN GENERAL. The duty devolving upon the master to furnish his servants a safe place to work⁴ in the first instance is one which cannot be delegated so as to relieve the master from liability, on the prescribing rules, where the same are required. Sanner v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 337, 43 S. W. 533.

98. Peterson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 77 Conn. 351, 59 Atl. 502.

"The adjudications upon this subject—so multitudinous as almost to warrant the simile, 'thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks in Vallambrosa'—these adjudications are so discordant, enumerating so many rules, stating so many limitations, applying the law to facts so diverse, that one is reminded of Gibbon's remark upon the infinite variety of laws and opinions when Justinian entered upon the reform of codification—that they were beyond the power of any capacity to digest." Ell v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 1 N. D. 336, 343, 48 N. W. 222, 26 Am. St. Rep. 621, 12 L. R. A. 97.

99. Shaw v. Manchester St. R. Co., 73 N. H. 65, 58 Atl. 1073; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Needham, 63 Fed. 107, 11 C. C. A. 56, 25 L. R. A. 833.

"The line of demarcation between the negligent acts of a fellow-servant for which the master remains liable, and those for which he does not, is sometimes quite vague and shadowy, and it is not surprising that the decisions upon the subject are conflicting. That line has been defined or described in this way: It is 'the line that separates the work of construction, preparation, and preservation from the work of operation. Is the act in question work required to construct, to prepare, to place in a safe location, or to keep in repair the machinery furnished by the employer? If so, it is his personal duty to exercise ordinary care to perform it. Is the act in question required to properly and safely operate the machinery furnished, or to prevent the safe place in which it was furnished from becoming dangerous through its negligent operation? If so, it is the duty of the servants to perform that act, and they, and not the master, assume the risk of negligence in its performance.'" Peterson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 77 Conn. 351, 356, 59 Atl. 502; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Needham, 63 Fed. 107, 11 C. C. A. 56, 25 L. R. A. 833 and note.

Meaning of "place."—"To make the above statement certain requires a consideration of the meaning of the word 'place.' If by this it is meant that the master, by himself or representative, must be always present to ward off every transient peril that may menace the servant in the particular spot or place that he may chance to occupy while engaged in the performance of his work, then it must be affirmed that the rule of law devolves upon the master a duty that in many instances it would be wholly impracticable to discharge. A railroad company could scarcely employ vice-principals enough to make it sufficiently argus-eyed to guard its servants to that extent. Furthermore, it is to be observed that in some lines of business, like the operation of a railroad, many servants are employed whose respective duties are so correlated that in the very forwarding of the master's business they are protecting the lives and limbs of their co-servants; and if some limitation be not put upon the word 'place,' as respects transient dangers in the conducting of the details of the business, then every one of such servants becomes, for some purposes, a vice-principal, and the integrity of the co-servant rule is destroyed." Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 689, 695, 68 N. E. 262, 63 L. R. A. 460. A place, in its broad sense, is never safe in which an accident happens, and an accident always happens in some place, and so the master might almost become an insurer. Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, supra; Butler v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105, 26 N. E. 1017.

A statute requiring the employment of a competent mining boss does not relieve the dition, and failed to remedy it within a reasonable time, where a servant is injured by reason thereof.⁶ This rule does not extend, however, to negligent acts of a servant making a safe place unsafe,⁷ nor where the negligence relates to details of arrangement and execution in keeping a place safe.⁸ Where the place

St. 72, 3 Atl. 813.

Duty to furnish lights.—The negligence of an employee to whom was delegated the lighting the hold of a ship, where an employee was injured, was that of the master and not of a fellow servant. Madigan v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co., 82 N. Y. App. Div. 206, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 705; The Santiago, 131 Fed. 383; Sumney v. Holt, 15 Fed. 880. But see Mellen v. Wilson, 159 Mass. 88, 34 N. E. 96, holding that where an employee was injured by falling down an unlighted hatchway, the electric lights having gone out by an accident which the engineer could have repaired, the master was not liable where there were lanterns that might have been used.

Excavations.—Employees engaged in digging a trench are not the fellow servants of those subsequently engaged in laying a pipe in the trench. Eichholz v. Niagara Falls Hydraulic Power, etc., Co., 68 N. Y. App. Div. 441, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 842. And see Kranz v. Long Island R. Co., 123 N. Y. 1, 25 N. E. 206, 20 Am. St. Rep. 716; *Schmit v. Laborer returning from work on cars.—A laborer employed by a street railway company, when returning home after a day's work free of charge, on one of the company's cars, is not a fellow servant of the conductor, so as to preclude recovery for injuries received by falling through a gate on the car, left unsecured by the conductor's negligence. Pendergast v. Union R. Co., 10 N. Y. App. Div. 207, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 927.

A conductor cannot be said to represent the master in providing a place for the brakeman on the train even if the placing of a car may be said to constitute providing a place. Ott v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 395, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 85.

In Washington it is held that the master not only owes the duty to provide a reasonably safe place in which to work but also to observe such care as will not expose the employee to perils and dangers which may be guarded against by reasonable care and diligence, and that where the performance of this positive duty is intrusted by the master to another his failure to perform is the failure of the master. *McDonough v. Setting machinery in motion.—An employee injured while working under or about machinery by the negligence of the engineer in setting in motion the machinery cannot recover, the engineer being a fellow servant. Bergstrom v. Staples, 82 Mich. 654, 46 N. W. 1035; Ewan v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 192, 54 Am. Rep. 148; Henshaw v. Pond's Extract Co., 21 N. Y. Suppl. 177 [affirmed in 149 N. Y. 582, 43 N. E. 987]. Ventilation.—Where the room in which a machine is run is suitable for such work, the fact that the foreman in charge of the machine does not ventilate the room on a particular occasion according to the directions of the master, whereby a fellow servant is injured, does not render the master liable, as in such act the foreman is a fellow servant. McGuerty v. Hale, 161 Mass. 51, 36 N. E. 682.

When the danger arises, not from the place itself, but from the use of it for the work, and no special skill or experience beyond that involved in doing the work is required to maintain the safety of the place, the main-

for work is reasonably safe the master is not liable for the negligence of a superior servant in placing the injured servant at work at a certain place which is dangerous.⁹

(2) TEMPORARY PLACE OR PLACE PREPARED BY SERVANT. Where the place of work is not permanent, or has not been previously prepared by the master as a place for the doing of the work, or where the servant is employed to make his own place to work in, so that the place is the result of the very work for which the servant is employed, or where the place is inherently dangerous and necessarily changes from time to time as the work progresses, the rule has no application and the negligent employee is generally held a fellow servant.¹⁰ This rule is applied where the injury results from the fall of a defective staging.¹¹ So where the work consists in making safe the place and condition of which the injured servant complains the rule that the duty to provide a safe place cannot be delegated has no application.¹² And the master is not liable for the negligent act of a foreman or superintendent in making a place safe for employees, where such negligent act results in direct injury to another servant while the work of making the place safe is in progress.¹³ tenance of such safety is the duty of the servant because it is a part of the work. McLaine v. Head, etc., Co., 71 N. H. 294, 52 Atl. 545, 93 Am. St. Rep. 522, 58 L. R. A. 462.

Digging of trench.—If a person employed to dig a trench is injured by the caving in of the sides, his employer is not liable if he furnished the materials for sheathing or shoring up the sides and the materials were not used for that purpose by the person employed by him to superintend the digging of the trench. Floyd v. Sugden, 134 Mass. 563; Curley v. Hoff, 62 N. J. L. 758, 42 Atl. 731; Collins v. Crimmins, 11 Misc. (N. Y.) 24, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 860; Dwyer v. Hickler, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 814. Contra, Van Steenburgh v. Thornton, 58 N. J. L. 160, 33 Atl. 380.

For instance the leaving open a dangerous place, such as a hatchway or trap-door, is negligence as to details rather than negligence in furnishing a safe place to work. Baron v. Detroit, etc., Steam Nav. Co., 91 Mich. 585, 52 N. W. 22; Filbert v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 121 N. Y. 207, 23 N. E. 1104; Bateman v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 67 N. Y. Suppl. 74; Davis v. Trade Dollar Consol. Min. Co., 117 Fed. 122, 54 C. C. A. 636.

Limitation of rule.—It has been said, however, that the rule has no iron-bound limitations as to whether the place was a temporary or permanent one, and it has been held that if a master sends a servant to work in a place of danger, however temporary, and the danger arises from acts or omissions of other servants against which the servant has no means of protecting himself, it is the duty of the master to provide such warnings or to take such other steps as may be reasonably necessary to safeguard the servant so employed; and if another servant of higher or lower degree is delegated by the master to attend to such safeguarding he is performing the functions of the master, and if guilty of negligence the master is responsible. Crist v. Wichita Gas, etc., Co., 72 Kan. 135, 83 Pac. 199; Coffeyville Vitirified Brick, etc., Co. v. Shanks, 69 Kan. 306, 76 Pac. 850.

Erection of building.—The obligation of a master to provide reasonably safe places and structures for his servants to work upon does not impose upon him the duty, as toward them, of keeping a building, which they are employed in erecting, in a safe condition at every moment of their work, so far as its safety depends upon the due performance of that work by them and their fellows. Armour v. Hahn, 111 U. S. 313, 4 S. Ct. 433, 28 L. ed. 440.

12. Bedford Belt R. Co. v. Brown, 142 Ind. 659, 42 N. E. 359.

Removal of debris.—Thus the rule does not apply to the removal of débris after some accident which has made the place unsafe and unfit for the use to which it has been devoted, and where the very object of the work is to clear away the wreckage and restore the place to a condition of safety and usefulness. Florence, etc., R. Co. v. Whippis, 138 Fed. 13, 70 C. C. A. 443.

(3) APPLICATION OF RULE TO RAILROAD COMPANY. A railroad company must furnish its employees a safe place to work, and where it delegates such duty the servant to whom the duty is delegated is a vice-principal,¹⁴ especially where the duty is imposed by statute.¹⁵ This non-delegable duty extends inter alia to the original construction of the roadway,¹⁶ and to the furnishing of a safe track.¹⁷ But where the road-bed is safe but is rendered temporarily unsafe by the act of a fellow servant, the company is not liable where it had no actual or constructive notice thereof.¹⁸ Thus the duty of opening and closing a railroad switch is not one of the personal duties of a master but is a duty of a servant as a duty of operation;¹⁹ it is not a defect in the road-bed for which a person thereby injured can recover from the company, on an allegation of failure to maintain its road-bed in safe condition.²⁰ Where the duty of keeping the track free from obstructions is delegated to a servant he is not a fellow servant of train employees injured by the former's negligence.²¹ So the company is ordinarily liable for injuries to a Section foremen are vice-principals when engaged in the performance of a duty the master owes to its servants traveling over its road-bed on trains, as where it is their duty to keep the track clear from obstructions.

servant on trains caused by obstructions near the track, although the obstructions were put or left there by other servants of the company,²² although the rule seems to be otherwise where the obstruction is merely temporary.²³ On the other hand, where the servant of a railroad company, such as a car repairer or the like, is injured while at work under or between an engine or cars by the starting of the engine or an engine backing into the car, the negligent servant is usually considered a fellow servant,²⁴ except in those states where the superior servant rule is followed and the repairer or inspector was working under the engine or car pursuant to the orders of the negligent superior servant.²⁵

(D) Safe Tools, Machinery, and Appliances—(1) IN GENERAL. The duty to furnish safe tools, machinery, and other appliances is closely allied to the duty to furnish a safe place to work, and is governed by the same rules.²⁶ A servant to whom such duty is intrusted is a vice-principal, and for his omission or negligence in regard thereto the master is liable.²⁷ There are, however, many matters

Duty to supervise.—Where the master furnishes proper and safe appliances it is detail of the work and the master is not liable on the theory of inability to delegate a personal duty.

(2) APPLIANCES FURNISHED BY SERVANT. Where a servant is authorized or required by the employment to himself furnish his own appliances for the work, the master is not liable where a fellow servant is injured because of defects therein.³² A fortiori where machinery is furnished by a fellow servant against the master's orders the master is not liable.³³

(3) APPLIANCES CONSTRUCTED AS PART OF WORK — (a) IN GENERAL. The rule as to the non-delegable duty to furnish a safe place and appliances is subject to the exception that where the master undertakes merely to furnish the materials needed for the construction of some appliance which is to be constructed by the workmen themselves as incident to the main work, the master's duty is performed if he furnishes suitable material and competent workmen, and the negligence of a co-servant who constructs the appliance by which the employee is injured is that of a fellow servant for which the master is not liable.³⁴ In other words, if the preparation of the appliance is a part of the work which the servant is required to perform, the master is not liable for any defect in its preparation owing to the negligence of another servant.³⁵ And the fact that an injured servant did not become an employee until after the negligent act complained of does not alter the relation of fellow servants.³⁶

(b) SCAFFOLDS, PLATFORMS, AND RUNWAYS. As illustrating the rule just stated, it is held that where a master furnishes proper materials for a scaffold, platform, runway, or the like, and it is constructed by co-servants of one injured because of a defect therein, as a part of the work which they are employed to do, the master is ordinarily not liable,³⁷ except where the duty to furnish safe and suitable not his duty to see that they are used. Such duty is a delegable duty, so that negligence in relation thereto relates to a detail of the work for which the master is not liable. Kelly v. New Haven Steamboat Co., 74 Conn. 343, 50 Atl. 871, 92 Am. St. Rep. 220.

Selection of improper materials.—Where the master furnished proper materials he is not liable where the negligent servant selected insufficient lumber from the mass furnished. Colton v. Richards, 123 Mass. 484; Butler v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105, 26 N. E. 1017; Van den Heuvel v. National Furnace Co., 84 Wis. 636, 54 N. W. 1016.

Where a sufficient ladder was provided by the master, but a fellow servant constructed a new one, the breaking of which caused the injury, the master is not liable. Bolton v. Georgia Pac. R. Co., 83 Ga. 659, 10 S. E. 352.

Supervision of foreman.—In those states in which the superior servant rule is not followed the master is liable, although the appliance was constructed and erected under the supervision of a foreman. Noyes v. Wood, 102 Cal. 389, 36 Pac. 766; Kalleck v. Deering, 161 Mass. 469, 37 N. E. 450, 42 Am. St. Rep. 421; Howard v. Hood, 155 Mass. 391, 29 N. E. 630; Dewey v. Parke, 76 Mich. 631, 43 N. Contra.—Killea v. Faxon, 125 Mass. 485 (staging erected by carpenter and used by servants putting on copper gutters); Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 386, 29 N. W. 15 (carpenters and painters).

For instance, where a servant, who as an incident to his work was obliged to construct a scaffold, was unable to find suitable materials, and so informed the foreman, who told him to use an appliance that had been used in another kind of work, but this appliance was not suitable for the work and the foreman undertook to adapt it thereto, after which he told the servant that it was a good scaffold, and to go on with his work, the foreman was not a fellow servant as to the construction of such scaffold but was a vice-principal. Richards v. Hayes, 17 N. Y. App. Div. 422, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 234.

Where the servants constructing the scaffold or other appliance were employed exclusively for that purpose they are not the fellow servants of employees who use such stagings. McNamara v. MacDonald, 102 Cal. 575, 36 Pac. 941; Sims v. American Steel Barge Co., 56 Minn. 68, 57 N. W. 322, delegated to a servant he becomes a vice-principal in regard thereto.⁴⁰ In some cases the master has been held liable upon the theory that the scaffold was of a permanent character.⁴¹

(4) STATUTORY PROVISIONS. Where a statute provides that all machinery must be properly guarded and that when guards are taken off in order to make repairs they must be promptly replaced, the failure of the foreman to replace the guard is not the negligence of a fellow servant,⁴² and the same rule applies to the failure to use a guard.⁴³ But a statute requiring the furnishing of safe appliances does not make the master liable for the negligence of a co-servant in operating a safe appliance.⁴⁴

(5) APPLICATION OF RULE TO RAILROAD COMPANY. The duty of a railroad company to furnish its servants safe cars and locomotives is non-delegable.⁴⁵ On the other hand, where the injury does not result from the failure to furnish safe cars and locomotives but from the negligence of a fellow servant in the use thereof, the railroad company is ordinarily not liable.⁴⁶ For instance, where

Use as support.—Where a scaffold is intended not only as a place where the workmen are to stand but also as a support upon which to place an entire superstructure during the course of its erection, and the workmen had no control over the mode of the erection of the scaffold, a scaffold is not of such a character as comes within the exception to the general rule which relieves the master from liability for stagings or scaffoldings erected by laborers who are to work thereon. *F. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 401.

Illustrations.—On the theory that it was the company's duty to furnish safe cars the master has been held liable where the car furnished was not suitable for the load (Redington v. New York, etc., R. Co., 84 Hun (N. Y.) 231, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 535 [affirmed in 152 N. Y. 655, 47 N. E. 1111]), and also where a rotten stake was used to hold the load on a car, notwithstanding sound lumber had been furnished for stakes (McIntyre v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 163 Mass. 189, 39 N. E. 1012).

Purchase of locomotive.—Agents of a railroad company intrusted with the duty of purchasing a locomotive are not the fellow servants of those operating it. Cumberland, etc., R. Co. v. State, 44 Md. 283, 45 Md. 229.

Engine without chimney for its headlight.—The fact that a railroad company, which permits an engine to start out on a trip without any chimney for its headlight, in consequence of which a collision results, provides a chimney at a station along the route, which the engineer neglects to obtain, does not relieve the company from liability, the engineer standing in its place, and not in that of a fellow servant, with respect to the duty of obtaining the chimney. Sutter v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 79 N. Y. App. Div. 362, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 1106.

The duty of a street-car company to furnish cars which are in proper position necessarily involves the duty of selecting cars to be used, so that a car starter performing such duty is in the exercise of a non-delegable duty and the master is not relieved from responsibility for his negligence. *Quinn v. proper car couplers are furnished by the railroad company, it is not liable to a servant for the negligence of a co-servant in using defective couplers.⁴⁷ So where a railroad company provided a proper headlight for its locomotive, the negligence of its servants in failing to light it was the negligence of a fellow servant.⁴⁸

(E) Duty to Inspect and Repair—(1) IN GENERAL. The duty of the master to inspect and repair, to make the place and appliances safe, is generally held to be non-delegable so as to relieve the master from liability for negligence in respect thereto.⁴⁹ The rule in most of the states is that the master cannot shield himself by exercising due care in employing a competent servant to make such inspection and repairs, but that the servant intrusted with such duty is not a fellow servant of one injured because of the failure to properly inspect or repair;⁵⁰

lis, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 102 Ind. 352, 26 N. E. 200; Jarman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 98 Mich. 135, 57 N. W. 32; Conger v. Flint, etc., R. Co., 86 Mich. 76, 48 N. W. 695; Foster v. A railroad company is not liable for injuries caused to one of its employees by the negligence of his fellow employee in using a car covered with ice for loading rails. Hanley v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 62 N. H. 274.

Running hand-car.—Negligence of a section foreman in running a hand-car at a dangerous speed (Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 16 S. Ct. 848, 40 L. ed. 999), or in ordering section men to run the car to a certain point so close to the schedule time of the train that a collision occurs (Weger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 55 Pa. St. 460), is the negligence of a fellow servant for which the master is not liable.

Injured servant working about defective cars.—Where plaintiff was employed by a railroad company to aid in taking defective cars from trains, the neglect of the customary precaution of chaining up or propping up a defective drawhead, in such a car, whereby plaintiff was injured, if not chargeable in some degree to plaintiff, was the neglect of his co-servants, and not that of the master. Arnold v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 125 N. Y. 15, 25 N. E. 1064.

Absence of sufficient sand in box on engine.—A railroad company is not liable for injuries to a brakeman, caused by the want of sufficient sand in the sand box on the engine, if the lack of such sand was due to the failure of a servant whose duty it was to fill the sand boxes before trains started; the railroad company not being negligent in the selection and retention of the latter employee. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 406.

Inspection of new machinery.—The negligence of defendant's foreman in failing to notice the defect in machinery when it came from the manufacturer, or in failing afterward to discover the defect, is the negligence of a servant in the discharge of a duty which the master owes his other servants, and not the negligence of a fellow servant. Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331, 29 Atl. 380.

Mine inspection.—The duty to inspect a mine and its appliances cannot be delegated so as to relieve the master from responsibility where a miner is injured because of the failure so to do. Cerrillos Coal R. Co. v. Deserant, 9 N. M. 49, 49 Pac. 807; Costa v. Pacific Coast Co., 26 Wash. 138, 66 Pac. 398 (gas inspection); Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co. v. Jones, 130 Fed. 813, 65 C. C. A. 363; *Gowen v. Suppl. 190, holding that a servant inspecting a place where blasting is in progress, for the purpose of discovering unexploded charges, is a fellow servant of one engaged in clearing away the debris, and who is injured by coming in contact with an unexploded charge.

Inspection of telephone poles.—Where the duty of inspecting telephone poles before a lineman climbs the same is delegated by the company to a foreman, he is not a fellow servant of a lineman in that regard, but a vice-principal, and the company is liable to the lineman for an injury due to the failure of the foreman to perform the duty of inspection. Cumberland Tel., etc., Co. v. Bills, 128 Fed. 272, 62 C. merely replacing the defective appliance with a sound appliance from a stock furnished by the master.⁵² So a failure to report to the proper servant an appliance that is out of order and needs repairs does not of itself make the master liable for an injury resulting from the failure to repair.⁵³ And the master is not liable for the negligent act in inspecting or repairing machinery or appliances, where such negligent act results in direct injury to another servant while the work of inspection or repairing is in progress.⁵⁴ There is no non-delegable duty of inspection of an appliance constructed by the servants in the course of their employment.⁵⁵

(2) INCIDENTAL INSPECTION AND REPAIRS. The rule that a servant intrusted with the duty to inspect and repair is not a fellow servant does not apply to defects arising in the daily use of the machines or appliances, which are not of a permanent character and do not require the help of skilled mechanics to repair, but which may easily be and are usually remedied by the workmen, and to repair which proper and suitable materials are supplied.⁵⁶ And when the employee's duty to inspect or repair is incidental to his duty to use the apparatus in the common employment, he is not intrusted with the master's duty to his fellow servants, and the master is not responsible to his fellow servants for his negligence.⁵⁷

Defects in engine.—A railroad company cannot avoid liability for injuries to an engineer caused by defects in the engine, by showing that it had delegated the duty of keeping it in repair to a fellow servant. Lawless v. Connecticut River R. Co., 136 Mass. 1; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co., 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598.

Employment of competent inspectors not of itself sufficient.—The duty of a railroad company to exercise reasonable care in furnishing adequately safe trains for the use of its employees is not discharged by simply using reasonable care to employ and retain only competent and diligent inspectors, but it is liable if its inspectors in fact fail to discover a defect which a reasonable examination would have disclosed. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Snyder, 152 U. S. 684, 14 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. ed. 597 [affirming 6 Utah 357, 23 Pac. 762].

Effect of servant giving proper instructions for repairs.—The fact that there was no negligence in employing the superintendent of repairs, or in making proper regulations, and that the master mechanic in charge gave proper instructions for repairing, and that the negligence was that of the workmen directed to make the repairs, does not relieve the master of liability. Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575.

Duty to repair defective cars.—Trainmen charged with the duty, upon discovering the defective condition of a car, to report it to the master for repair, and to discontinue the use of it until it is restored to a reasonably safe condition, are not fellow servants of a section foreman killed in consequence of their neglect. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cullen, 87 Ill. App. 374 [affirmed in 187 Ill. 523, 58 N. E. 455].

Repairer of electric railway.—The car repairer of an electric railway is not a fellow servant of a conductor whose death was caused by inadequacy of repairs. Denver Tramway Co. v. Crumbaugh, 23 Colo. 363, 48 Pac. 503.

Repair of harness.—A driver of a street car is not a fellow servant of the "head changer" and his assistants, whose duty it is to inspect and repair the harness, so as to exempt the company from liability for the driver's death, caused by their negligence in failing to inspect and replace a defective hamestrap. McKnight v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 527, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 738.

Supplies as distinguished from repairs.—A new wick in the headlight of a locomotive, to replace an old one, is a supply, and not a repair; and where a rule of a railroad company requires the engineer to see that the headlight is in order, and he fails to do so, in consequence of which a fireman on another train is injured, the injury is the result of the negligence of a fellow servant. *Simpson v. inspecting the loading of a car.⁶⁴ Of course where defects are latent and not discoverable by an ordinary inspection, the master is not liable where he has employed a competent inspector.⁶⁵

bb. Car Inspector. A car inspector is vested with a duty of the master so as to be a vice-principal.⁶⁶ He is not a fellow servant of a brakeman so as to relieve the master from liability for the negligence of such inspector in failing to discover a defect which caused an injury to the brakeman.⁶⁷

cc. Cars of Another Railroad Company. A railroad company is bound to inspect the cars of another company used upon its road, just as it would inspect its own cars. It owes this duty as master, and is responsible for the consequences of such defects as would be disclosed or discovered by ordinary inspection. When cars come to it from another road which have defects, visible or discernible by ordinary examination, it must either remedy such defects or refuse to take them, and one to whom such duty is delegated is a vice-principal.⁶⁸

Warning as to approach of trains.—Where plaintiff's intestate was working on a railway track over which trains ran, and it was the duty of the foreman, on the approach of a train, to call to the men to look out for the train on a certain track, and plaintiff's intestate was killed by failure of the foreman to give the customary warning, such warning was a duty owed by defendant to deceased, and the failure to perform this duty was imputable to defendant as employer. D'Agostino v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 72 N. J. L. 358, 60 Atl. 1113. The negligence of a towerman in charge of gates at a railway crossing in failing to give warning of the approach of an engine by lowering the gates, resulting in the injury of a foreman of a switch crew, is the negligence of the master, and not that of a fellow servant. *Chicago, etc., R. The duty of causing a flag to be sent ahead to signal approaching trains while a hand-car was proceeding along the track is not one which the railroad company was required to perform as principal or master, but one which rests upon the foreman merely as a fellow servant with the other members of his gang on the hand-car. Whittlesy v. New York, etc., R. Co., 77 Conn. 100, 58 Atl. 459, 107 Am. St. Rep. 21.

A watchman or flagman whose negligence in giving warning results in injury to another employee is a fellow servant of such employee. Luebke v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 63 Wis. 91, 23 N. Trains following each other.—Neglect of the servant in charge of a train, part of which was standing on the track, detached from the engine, to warn an approaching train, is not a breach of the master's duty to furnish a "safe place" entitling an injured employee to recover. Jenkins v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 39 S. C. 507, 18 S. E. 182, 39 Am. St. Rep. 750.

Where a peril develops during the progress of the work and relates to an incident of the work, the duty of a servant to warn another relates to a mere detail of the work. Maltbie v. Belden, 167 N. Y. 307, 60 N. E. 645, 54 L. R. A. 52 [reversing 45 N. Y. App. Div. 384, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 824].

Blasting.—Failure to give warning of a blast where such work is being carried on continuously is the negligence of a fellow servant. Gallagher v. McMullin, 25 N. Y. App. Div. 571, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 734; Donovan v. Ferris, 128 Cal. 48, 60 Pac. 519, 79 Am. St. Rep. 25; Kelly Island Lime, etc., Co. v. Pachuta, 69 Ohio St. 462, 69 N. E. 988, 100 Am. St. Rep. 706. Contra, Belleville Stone Co. v. Mooney, 61 N. J. L. 253, 39 Atl. 764, 39 L. R. A. 834 [affirming 60 N. J. L. 323, 38 Atl. 835]. But where the explosion of a particular blast was in the control of plainofficial act of an agent who is a vice-principal by virtue of his rank.⁷² Of course there is no duty to warn or instruct where the work is of such a character as to require no special skill or instruction,⁷³ nor where the danger is obvious and the servant has had experience.⁷⁴

(a) *Promulgation of Rules*⁷⁵ — (1) IN GENERAL. The duty of the master to promulgate necessary rules for the conduct of the business⁷⁶ cannot be delegated so as to shield him from responsibility.⁷⁷ But where the master has performed his duty in this respect he cannot be held liable, where he has used reasonable care in selecting competent servants, for their failure to observe such rules.⁷⁸

(2) TRAIN DESPATCHER. This rule is applied in decisions holding that a train despatcher having control of the movements of trains upon a railroad is, in the performance of his duties as such, a vice-principal as to other employees of the railroad injured by reason of his negligence.⁷⁹ So one who performs the duties of tiff and a fellow servant, and without warning the blast was exploded by the fellow servant, injuring plaintiff, and a custom prevailed that no blast should be exploded without giving two distinct signals, the failure of such fellow servant so to observe the rule was the failure of the master, as such servant stood in his place, and the master was liable for the resulting injuries. Hjelm v. Western Granite Contracting Co., 94 Minn. 169, 102 N. W. 384.

Unexploded blasts.—The duty to warn the succeeding shift of miners of unexploded blasts has been held non-delegable. Shannon v. Consolidated Tiger, etc., Min. Co., 24 Wash. 119, 64 Pac. 169. But see Anderson v. Daly Min. Co., 16 Utah 28, 50 Pac. 815, where the practice was to report to the successors the number of missed holes, but if the outgoing shift failed to report the oncoming shift made inquiry, and this was the rule adopted by them for their security. It is held that the failure to warn a servant engaged in making preparations for a blast as to unexploded charges is the negligence of a fellow servant. Vitto v. Keogan, 15 N. Y. App. Div. 329, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 1.

72. See supra, IV, G, 4, a, (vi), (c).

Promise to warn.—The duty of one who is a vice-principal because of his rank to give warning to an inferior servant may result from his promise to such servant to give such warning. Bradley v. New York Cent. R. Co., 3 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 288 [affirmed in 62 N. Y. 99]; Wall v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 432. See also Rowland v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 20 Mo. App. 463. On the other hand, if the assurance relates to a mere detail of the work, the master is not bound, even though it be given by his alter ego. Schott v. Onondaga County Sav. Bank, 49 N. Y. App. Div. 503, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 631. See also Riley v. O'Brien, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 147, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 129; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Lahr, 86 Tenn. 335, 6 S. W. 663.

Time-table.—Where a railroad company formulates a proper and safe time-table, the negligence of the employees in charge of a train in disregarding such time-table, whereby a collision occurs in which a brakeman is killed, is the negligence of a fellow servant, for which the representatives of the brakeman cannot recover. *Rose v. a train despatcher,⁸⁰ such as a station agent,⁸¹ is a vice-principal while acting as train despatcher.

(3) TELEGRAPH OPERATORS AND OTHER SERVANTS TRANSMITTING ORDERS. While the employee who makes rules is not a fellow servant, in so far as negligence in connection therewith is concerned, it is otherwise as to one who merely transmits orders.⁸² Thus a telegraph operator whose duty it is to transmit information in regard to the location of trains upon the road and communicate instructions for running them, received by him from the train despatchers, is the fellow servant of employees in charge of such train.⁸³ So a telegraph operator whose duty it is to display signals to govern the running of trains is a fellow servant of those in charge of a train injured in a collision caused by the operator's neglect of such duty.⁸⁴

(H) Employment of Servants—(1) SELECTION AND RETENTION. The selection of servants is a personal duty of the master and he cannot avoid liability for injuries to another servant caused by the negligent performance of that duty by showing that he delegated the performance of the duty to a fellow servant, the latter being a vice-principal in that respect.⁸⁵ For example, where a railroad engineer leaves his engine with the management of the fireman or other employee unskilled in running an engine, and a fellow servant is injured thereby, the company is liable.⁸⁶ Where a servant becomes incompetent, the negligence of the employee whose duty it was to employ and discharge, in thereafter retaining him, is the negligence of a vice-principal.⁸⁷

(2) DUTY TO SUPPLY SUFFICIENT NUMBER OF SERVANTS. The duty of using reasonable care to supply a sufficient number of servants to perform the work with reasonable and ordinary safety to those engaged in it is one which cannot be delegated to a servant so as to relieve the master from liability.⁸⁸

For instance, where a superintendent sends away the employee in charge of an engine and himself attempts to operate it whereby a servant is injured, the master is liable. Beresford v. American Coal Co., 124 Iowa 34, 98 N. W. 902, 70 L. R. A. 256.

Directing inexperienced workmen to perform work.—A master is liable for the negligence of the foreman in directing an inexperienced workman to operate the lever of the machine whereby another servant was injured, on account of the improper manner of handling the lever. Fraser v. Schroeder, 163 Ill. 459, 45 N. E. 288 [affirming 60 Ill. App. 519]. But where a railroad employed in its repair shop a requisite number of servants who were skilful in doing certain work, but the foreman of the shop negligently detailed on such work an unskilful servant, whose lack of skill caused an injury to another servant, the master was not liable. The fact that a servant has power to temporarily suspend men under him, where he has not the power to discharge them, does not make him a vice-principal in so far as the duty to exercise reasonable care to retain in the service only those employees who were careful and prudent is concerned. Weeks v. Scharer, 129 Fed. 333, 64 C. C. A. 11. Contra, Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Henthorne, 73 Fed. 634, 19 C. C. A. 623.

The ground upon which those courts proceed which hold an employer liable to his servants for the negligent acts of other servants in a separate and distinct department is that the servant only accepts the risk of the negligence of those so closely associated with him as that he may be supposed to have contracted with reference to the possibility of their negligence, they coming through such association to some extent under his influence. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Stuber, 108 Fed. 934, 48 C. C. A. 149, 54 L. R. A. 696.

In Kentucky where the master is liable, under the superior servant rule, only in cases where the negligence is gross, the rule as to gross negligence does not extend to injuries where the servants are in different departments, but in such case ordinary negligence may be sufficient. *Louisville, etc., R. adopted by the employers' liability acts in some of the states which had previously rejected it.⁹²

(B) *What Constitutes a Department.*⁹³ One of the reasons given by the courts rejecting the different department rule is the inability to determine what is a separate and distinct department.⁹⁴ Even in those states which have adopted the rule no definition has been attempted to determine what constitutes a department. It has been held that the rule cannot be applied where only a few servants are employed, and they are so closely associated in work, and the area of operations is so circumscribed that but one superintendent over all is required.⁹⁵ A train crew of a railroad and trackmen are in different departments.⁹⁶ Thus a car inspector or repairer has been held to be in a different department from a train

In the federal courts the rule is that if the departments of the two servants are so far separated from each other that the possibility of coming in contact, and hence of incurring danger from the negligent performance of the duties of such other department, could not be said to be within the contemplation of the person injured, the doctrine of fellow service should not apply. *Northern Pac. (c) Consociation Rule—(1) STATEMENT OF RULE. Under the consociation doctrine adopted in connection with the different department rule in some of the states, employees are fellow servants when they are brought into such personal relations that they may exercise an influence upon each other promotive of their mutual safety either (1) by directly coöperating in the same work at the time of the injury, or (2) by their usual duties.⁸ In other words, if the servants at the time of the injury were actually coöperating in the particular business in hand, they are fellow servants for the time being, notwithstanding they may have been regularly employed and their ordinary duties require them to work in different departments of the master's business;⁹ while on the other hand it is not necessary that the servants be actually coöperating with each other at the time of the injury in order to be fellow servants if their work is in the same department so as to bring them into habitual association or into such relations that they may exercise an influence upon each other promotive of proper caution.¹⁰ The relation of fellow servants does not depend upon personal acquaintance,¹¹ nor actual previous association between the servants,¹² nor upon the fact that the injured employee was only temporarily engaged at a particular task.¹³ The fact that servants are working under different foremen may prevent them from being fellow servants,¹⁴ but it does not where their work brings them into frequent contact with each other.¹⁵

(2) APPLICATION OF RULE. Under this rule the following railroad employees have been held not fellow servants: Boiler maker and locomotive fireman;¹⁶ car inspector or repairer and brakeman;¹⁷ car inspector and yard switchman;¹⁸

Illustrations of non-consociation.—The fact that a section foreman, who is injured by a freight train running upon him contrary to signal, was the one who ordered the signal to be given, does not tend to show that he was coöperating with those in charge of the train so as to render them his fellow servants. Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Rice, 144 Ill. 227, 33 N. E. 951. One whose usual employment is to load and unload cars in the yard of a rolling-mill is not the fellow servant of persons whose usual duties it is to have control of trains moving in the yard, even though he and the said persons, while engaged in their respective employments, can each observe how the other does his work. North Chicago Rolling-Mill Co. v. Johnson, 114 Ill. 57, 29 N. E. 186. While a railroad section hand may be a fellow servant of men in charge of a construction while he is coöperating with the latter in placing ballast upon the road-bed, he is not such a fellow servant after that work has ceased and he and the men in charge of such train have returned to their former and separate duties. Chicago, etc.,

R. Co. v. Kelly, 127 Ill. 637, 21 N. E. 203. Railroad fence builders and the engineer of a construction train are not fellow servants. Louisville, etc., Consol. R. Co. v. So a timberman employed to prop the roof of a mine is not, as a matter of law, a fellow servant of one employed as a driver in hauling coal in the mine. St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Scheiber, 167 Ill. 539, 47 N. E. 1052. Where a mining company was excavating two tunnels—one above the other—on a hillside, and a rock negligently ordered thrown down the hill by the superintendent of the gang at the upper tunnel struck and injured a man working under another superintendent at the lower tunnel, the superintendent of the upper tunnel gang and the injured man were not fellow servants, not having opportunity to take precautions against each other's negligence. Uren v. Golden Tunnel Min. Co., 24 Wash. 261, 64 Pac. 174.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 443.

Servant taking place of mine boss.—Where a mine boss who has control of a mine with power to hire and discharge employees delegates his powers and duties to a miner in his employ, such miner as to the performance of such duties is not the fellow servant of other miners but stands in the same relation as the mine boss. Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith, 65 Ohio St. 70, 61 N. E. 143, 87 Am. St. Rep. 547, 55 L. R. A. 99.

A boss driver in a coal mine has been held a vice-principal as to the servants employed as drivers. Collingwood v. Illinois, etc., Fuel Co., 125 Iowa 537, 101 N. W. 283.

Character of act.—The character of the act of a mine boss in ordering a miner to return and fire a third blast after two have exploded, as an act of superintendence, is not altered by the fact that in preparing the blasts, lighting one, and attempting to light another the boss acted as a fellow servant of the miner. Bane v. Irwin, 172 Mo. 306, 72 S. W. 522.

Mine boss where there is a general superintendent.—The relation of vice-principal borne by a mine boss toward a miner is not altered by the fact that there is a general superintendent who has supervision of both. Bane v. Irwin, 172 Mo. 306, 72 S. W. 522.

But see Anderson v. Bennett, 16 Oreg. 515, 19 Pac. 765, 8 Am. St. Rep. 311, holding that a foreman of a gang of men engaged in blasting in a tunnel, having authority to direct the work and to control the men, and hire and discharge them, was not a fellow servant of the men under him.

The foreman of one shift of men alternating with others in working in a mine is a fellow servant with the members of the other shifts, and the master is not liable for an injury to one of the men caused by the negligence of the foreman of the preceding shift. Davis v. Trade Dollar Consol. Min. Co., 117 Fed. 122, 54 C. C. A. 636.

An outside or "top boss" of a coal mine, who has charge of receiving the coal when brought to the surface, and of lowering material for the miners into it, without authority to employ or discharge men or to take charge of any department, is a fellow servant of the miners. Hughes v. Oregon Imp. Co., 20 Wash. 294, 55 Pac. 119.

Mining boss appointed pursuant to statute.—The fact that a mining boss was appointed pursuant to a statute requiring the operator of a mine to employ a skillful and competent mining boss does not change the rule that the grade of servants has no bearing on the question as to whether they are fellow servants. Colorado Coal, etc., Co. v. Lamb, 6 Colo. App. 255, 40 Pac. 251; Lineoski v. Susquehanna Coal Co., 157 Pa. St. 153, 27

Laborers acting alternately as brakemen.—Where laborers, at work on a railroad in transporting dirt on small truck cars a short distance, alternately act as brakemen, they are fellow servants, and no recovery can be had for an injury to one by the neglect of the other, although the negligent laborer was acting as brakeman at the time of the accident, and the injured laborer was not. (e) YARD EMPLOYEES AND SWITCHMEN. A yard master may have such authority as to be a vice-principal,⁷⁰ although ordinarily he is not a vice-principal,⁷¹ especially where he is subordinate to a train master.⁷² Except where the negligence relates to some non-delegable duty of the master,⁷³ an employee whose work is connected with railroad yards generally cannot recover for injuries received from the negligence of train or other employees using the yard, they being fellow servants.⁷⁴ For instance the members of different switching crews are fellow servants.⁷⁵ A fortiori members of a switching crew, such as the engineer and brakeman,⁷⁶ are fellow servants, as are the employees on a switch or other engine whose negligence was the cause of injury to car employees or switchmen.⁷⁷ A hostler is a fellow servant of a yard helper injured by the negligence of the former.⁷⁸ So an engineer is a fellow servant of an injured engine cleaner⁷⁹ or other yard workman.⁸⁰ An engineer in charge of a switch engine is a fellow servant of a switch conductor.⁸¹ The negligence of a switch tender, where the master has used due care in employing a competent person for the Injury to car inspector.—A yard master in charge of a yard and a brakeman and conductor are fellow servants of an injured car inspector employed in the yard to examine cars and determine whether they are in proper condition for use. Shuster v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (Del. 1906) 62 Atl. 689.

Brakemen engaged in switching are fellow servants (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Rush, 84 Ill. 570), and a brakeman working with a switching crew is a fellow servant of the other members of the crew (Sheets v. Chicago, etc., Coal R. Co., 139 Ind. 682, 39 N. E. 154).

A yard clerk whose duty required him to go into the yard to get the record of the seals of the cars which each train left or was to take away was the fellow servant of an engineer and train hand whose negligence in backing down upon him of part of a freight train was the cause of his injury, so as to preclude a recovery against the railroad company. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Hyde, 56 Fed. 188, 5 C. C. A. 461.

Different departments.—In those states where the different department rule is followed, employees working in the yard are not necessarily fellow servants. Thus it has been held that a track repairer working on the tracks in the switchyard is not a fellow servant of a crew in charge of a switch train (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. App. 540), and that members of the switching crew in charge of a different train than that on which deceased was employed as a brakeman are not fellow servants with him (Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Hill, 89 S. W. 523, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 530).

b. Under Employers' Liability Acts¹³—(1) GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS—(A) Nature and Construction of Statutes—(1) IN GENERAL.¹⁴ In some of the states constitutional and statutory provisions materially modify, and in some cases abrogate, the common-law rule exempting a master from liability for injuries to a servant caused by the negligence of a fellow servant.¹⁵ In some of the states the statute applies only to railroad companies, while in other states there are separate statutory provisions as to railroad companies.¹⁶ Such statutes, while they are not to be strictly construed,¹⁷ are not to be extended by implication inasmuch as they are in derogation of the common law;¹⁸ and while they do not take away any common-law remedy the servant may have,¹⁹ neither do they relieve him of that care and caution required of him by the common law.²⁰ The statutes do not make the master liable for an injury to an employee caused by a servant acting without authority wholly outside the scope of his employment.²¹

(2) STATUTES NOT EXPRESSLY RELATING TO SERVANTS. Before the passage of the employers' liability acts in this country, certain statutes were enacted making railroad or other companies liable to "any person" injured by reason of their negligence in certain particulars, and it was held that such statutes did not change the common-law rule as to a master's non-liability to a servant for injuries due to the negligence of a fellow servant.²² It was also held that general stat-

Injuries inflicted on a "stranger."—A statute providing that railroad companies shall be liable for all injuries inflicted on a "stranger," in the operation of a road, is not applicable to employees injured by the negligence of those standing in the relation of fellow servants to them. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Hughes, 49 Miss. 258.

utes giving a right of action for wrongful death did not abrogate the fellow servant rule.²³

(3) EMPLOYERS AFFECTED.²⁴ The statutes in most of the states apply only where the employer is a corporation,²⁵ and have no application to an individual employer,²⁶ or to a partnership.²⁷

(b) Extraterritorial Effect. The statutes have no extraterritorial effect and consequently do not create a right of action for an injury sustained by a servant in another state through the negligence of a fellow servant.²⁸

(c) Retroactive Effect. The statutes do not apply to injuries received prior to the time of their taking effect.²⁹ So it has been held that the repeal of the statute will not affect an action for injuries which occurred while it was in force.³⁰

(d) Effect on Care Required of Fellow Servant. The statute making companies liable to an employee for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant do not have the effect of requiring the exercise of extraordinary diligence and care on the part of the latter.³¹ It is sufficient if he exercises toward the injured servant that degree of care which prudent persons ordinarily exercise under like circumstances.³²

(II) STATUTES DECLARATORY OF COMMON LAW. The statutes in some of the states are merely declaratory of the common-law rule as it existed in those states which have adopted neither the superior servant nor the different department rule.³³

(III) SUPERIOR SERVANT RULE—(A) General Statutes—(1) RECOGNITION OF MINORITY RULE. In several of the states the superior servant rule which had been adopted in some of the states before the enactment of any statutes³⁴ is now recognized, at least in so far as railroad employees are concerned, with more or less qualifications, by statutory provisions.³⁵ Under these statutes, the master is

(2) WHO ARE SUPERIOR SERVANTS. The test is not the power to hire and discharge.³⁷ It is not necessary that the negligent servant was in charge or control of the injured servant if in fact the former was a servant in charge or control of other servants.³⁸ The following have been held superior servants within the statute so as to make the master liable for their negligence: Engine foreman;³⁹ foreman of switching crew;⁴⁰ foreman of section gang;⁴¹ foreman of construction work on bridge;⁴² conductor and engineer where brakeman is injured;⁴³ engineer engaged merely and simply in the discharge of his ordinary routine duties; such superior officer or person also being engaged in discharging simply the primary duties of his station, and not the positive duties of the master.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 354 et seq.

In Mississippi constitutional and statutory provisions modify but do not abrogate the common-law rule inasmuch as they make the master liable only where the injuries result from the negligence of a superior agent or officer or of a person having the right to control or direct the services of the party injured. Fenwick v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 100 Fed. 247, 40 C. C. A. 369. Although originally the statute was confined to the employees of railroad companies, it is now held to include the employees of all corporations. Brooks v. Mississippi Cotton Oil Co., 76 Miss. 874, 25 So. 479. Under such statutes the common-law rule does not apply where the negligent servant is a superior agent or officer (Fenwick v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., supra). See also Moore v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 135 Fed. 67, 67 C. C. A. 541, or is one having the right to control or direct the services of the person injured (Southern R. Co. v. Cheaves, 84 Miss. 565, 36 So. 691; Cheaves v. Southern R. Co., 82 Miss. 48, 33 So. 649, 34 So. 385).

Nature of negligent act.—The negligence of a fellow servant for which the employer is made liable, under the Ohio statute, is not merely negligence in the performance of a duty imposed upon the master personally but negligence in the performance of work pertaining to the negligent employee and others in the same work. Peirce v. Van Dusen, 78 Fed. 693, 24 C. C. A. 280.

In Texas the superior servant rule is adopted by statute as to railways. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Carlin, 189 U. S. 354, 23 S. Ct. 585, 47 L. ed. 849 [affirming 111 Fed. 777, 49 C. C. A. 605]. And in that state a superior servant having the power to control may recover of the master for injuries caused by the negligence of the workmen under his control. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Perry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 85 S. W. 62. Contra, see Moore v. Jones, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 39 S. W. 593.

In Ohio, under a provision of the statute that every person in the employ of a railroad company having charge or control of employees in any separate branch or department is not a fellow servant of employees in any other branch or department who have no power to direct or control in the branch or department in which they are employed, the engineer of one train is not a fellow servant of a brakeman on another train of the same company (Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Margrat, 51 Ohio St. 130, 37 N. E. 11), or a fireman in a different branch of service (Erie R. Co. v. Kane, 118 Fed. 223, 55 C. C. A. 129).

where locomotive fireman is injured;⁴⁴ train despatcher where engineer is injured;⁴⁵ and an engineer operating engine engaged in removing an obstruction and having charge of the other employees engaged on the work.⁴⁶ On the other hand the following employees have been held not superior servants or officers: Carpenter engaged with laborers in setting posts along a railroad who works under the direction of foreman in charge of the work;⁴⁷ temporary foreman of switching crew who had no authority to command the switchmen to pursue any particular line of action;⁴⁸ telegraph operator where engineer is injured;⁴⁹ and conductor having no authority over the injured engineer in matters affecting the engine.⁵⁰

(B) Superintendents—(1) IN GENERAL. In some jurisdictions the statute imposes liability upon the master where the injury to a servant is caused by the negligence of a co-servant intrusted with and exercising superintendence.⁵¹ In other states the master is made liable only for the negligence of one whose "principal or sole duty" is that of superintendence, while intrusted with and exercising superintendence.⁵² These statutes, in so far as adopted in those states which have rejected the superior servant doctrine, change the common-law rule and enlarge the liability of the master.⁵³

(2) WHO ARE SUPERINTENDENTS. A superintendent has been defined as a servant having control, with the power of authority, over other servants.⁵⁴ It has been held that it is not necessary to show that the superintendence was over the servant who complains of the negligence of the person intrusted with it.⁵⁵ In Massachusetts and other states adopting its statute, the person must be one whose "sole or principal" duty is that of superintendence.⁵⁶ Under such statutes an employee may be a superintendent, although there is a general superintendent over him,⁵⁷ or although he incidentally performs manual labor a part of the time;⁵⁸ but where he does the same work as the other laborers,⁵⁹ or works with his hands in doing manual labor the greater portion of his time,⁶⁰ he is ordinarily not one whose "sole or principal" duty is that of superintendence, although an employee may constantly labor with his hands and yet be one whose principal duty is that of superintendence.⁶¹ The fact that the negligent employee has the charge or control of the ways, works, machinery, or plant or a part thereof does not of itself make him a superintendent within the statute.⁶²

(3) NATURE OF NEGLIGENT ACT. The act must be that of a superintendent "exercising superintendence."⁶³ In other words, when the negligence of a superintendent is relied upon, the negligence complained of must occur not only during the superintendence but substantially in the exercise of it.⁶⁴ An act may

The conductor of a street car on which plaintiff, a conductor off duty, was injured, is not a person whose sole or principal duty was that of superintendence. McLaughlin v. Interurban St. R. So a conductor of a railroad train is not a superintendent nor one "entrusted with or exercising superintendence . . . in the absence of such superintendent" where he is obeying strict orders as to the running of the train. A yard master has been held a superintendent. Brady v. New York, etc., R. Co., 184 Mass. 225, 68 N. E. 227.

Other employees not superintendents.—An employee whose duty it is to signal another employee in charge of a crane to operate the crane, and who gives directions for the carrying out of the orders of a superior, is not a superintendent. Illustrations of acts not those of superintendence.—For a superintendent, when telling an employee to brush off the table of a machine in which were revolving knives, to tickle him, knowing that he was ticklish, whereby he was upset, throwing his hand among the knives, is not an act of superintendence, so as to make the master liable. Western R. Co. v. Milligan, 135 Ala. 205, 33 So. 438, 93 Am. St. Rep. 31.

Illustrations of acts of superintendence.—General control of the work of digging a sewer trench was given the superintendent of sewers of a town, and, while workmen were digging it, he walked to the edge of the bank, and, while looking at them, the bank caved, injuring a workman below. It was held that he was engaged in an act of superintendence. McCoy v. Westborough, 172 Mass. 504, 52 N. E. 1064. A superintendent, who has authority to continue the work in which he is engaged with the appliance at hand, or to get a suitable appliance, or to employ some other adequate means to do the work, is engaged in an act of superintendence, although he chooses to continue to use means originally employed by servants engaged in carrying out his initial order. Meagher v. Crawford Laundry Mach. Co., 187 Mass. 586, 73 N. E. 853.

Failure to observe rules.—The failure of a superintendent to observe the rules of the company, resulting in an injury to an inferior servant, is an act in the exercise of superintendence. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Hammond, 93 Ala. 181, 9 So. 577.

Starting train while servant making couplings.—Where one, in the absence of the regular train despatcher, had been accustomed for three years to perform his duties, his act in starting a train while plaintiff's decedent was coupling or attempting to withdraw to a place of safety was not a mere detail of work, under the Employers' Liability Act, but that of a superintendent, for whose negligence the railway would be liable. McHugh v. Manhattan R. Co., 179 N. Y. 378, 72 N. E. 312.

Falling of staging.—The injury to an employee by the falling of a staging on which he was carrying material is the result of negligence in the exercise of superintendence; the superintendent not having performed his duty of not allowing the staging to be used till he had used due diligence to see that it was properly put together and secured, which would have disclosed that the flooring rested merely on an insecurely nailed stay, with a knot in it. Solari v. West End St. R. Co., 172 Mass. 555, 52 N. E. 1072. The putting a can of powder on the edge of the pit, whence it was accidentally knocked into the pit, causing an explosion, is not an act of superintendence. Riou v. Rockport Granite Co., 171 Mass. 162, 50 N. E. 525. thereof.⁶⁷ An act done voluntarily while superintending, where not within the scope of his duties and without the direction or consent of the master, is not an act of superintendence.⁶⁸

(c) Negligence of Person to Whose Orders Injured Employee Bound to Conform. Some of the statutes impose liability upon the master, whether a railroad or other corporation, for injuries resulting from the negligence of any person in the service of the corporation to whose orders or direction the injured employee at the time of the injury was bound to conform and did conform.⁶⁹ Under such statutes it is held that there can be no recovery unless the injured employee is acting under some special order in respect to the particular service in which he was engaged when injured, as distinguished from general instructions as to duties connected with his employment generally.⁷⁰ The injury must be caused by the Starting engine.—Where the negligence complained of consisted in starting an engine under the existing circumstances, and not in the manner in which the engine was started, the decision of defendant's superintendent that the engine should be started was an act of superintendence, for which the master was responsible, although the superintendent also did the manual work of setting the engine in motion. *McPhee v. Act done in accordance with faulty method adopted as superintendent.—An employer is responsible for injuries to one of his workmen who is injured by the negligent act of the superintendent, which act was done in the capacity of an employee, but in accordance with a faulty method adopted by him as superintendent. *O'Brien v. This provision in the Indiana statute is not nullified or affected by the subsequent subdivision of the statute making the master liable for an injury resulting from the negligence of a person in the service of a corporation having charge of certain enumerated departments of railroad employment (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Wagner, 153 Ind. 420, 53 N. E. 927), nor by the provision in the subsequent subdivision making the corporation liable where the fellow servant was "acting in the place and performing the duty of the corporation in that behalf" (Indianapolis Gas Co. v. Shumack, 23 Ind. App. 87, 54 N. E. 414).

Going to place of danger.—An employee who, as an incident to the execution of the order of a superior, goes to a place of danger, must be deemed to be at such place in conformity to the order of that superior within *Burns Annot. It must be shown: (1) That the person who gave the orders or directions was in the service or employment of defendant; (2) that the injured servant was bound to conform to the orders of such person; (3) that he did conform to such orders and that his injuries resulted from having so conformed; and (4) that the person was negligent in giving the orders and directions. *Mobile, etc., R. negligence of such superior servant,⁷¹ who must have had authority to give the order,⁷² and the injury must have resulted from obedience to the order.⁷³ Furthermore the injured servant must have been bound to conform to the order.⁷⁴

(IV) DIFFERENT DEPARTMENT STATUTES—(A) In General. The different department rule which, independent of statute, has been generally rejected,⁷⁵ is expressly adopted by statute in several of the states, at least as to railway employees.⁷⁶

(B) What Constitutes Different Departments or Branches of Service. The statutes use the term "different department or branch of service" without defining what shall be deemed a different department or branch of service, and hence it must be determined upon principles analogous to those laid down in cases where the departmental limitation has been adopted and applied independent of statute.⁷⁷ It is held that "departments" and "branches of service" should not be so limited as to merely embrace those large divisions created for convenience in administering the affairs of the company, but that they relate to those minute ones which concern the daily duties of the employee.⁷⁸ It has also been stated that the word "department" or "service" merely means a subdivision of the business, such as running a train, clearing away a wreck, repairing a track, etc.⁷⁹ An engineer and a brakeman upon the same train are considered to be in the same department,⁸⁰ while on the other hand an engineer on one train is in a different department from the brakeman on another train.⁸¹ So also the following employees have been held to be in different departments or branches of service: A yard helper and an engineer who were engaged in operating locomotives;⁸² a switch tender and the conductor and engineer of a yard engine;⁸³ employees in locomotive and train departments;⁸⁴ a fireman and a telegraph operator;⁸⁵

(v) NEGLIGENCE OF EMPLOYEE AT TIME ACTING IN PLACE AND PERFORMING DUTY OF CORPORATION. Under the provisions of some statutes the corporation is liable for injuries to its employees where caused by the negligence of a fellow servant engaged in the same common service, where the negligent servant is at the time acting in the place and performing the duty of the corporation.⁸⁹

(vi) ACTS OR OMISSIONS IN OBEDIENCE TO RULES. A statutory provision making the master liable where the injury results from the act or omission of any person done or made in obedience to any rule, regulation, or by-law of the corporation, or in obedience to the particular instructions given by any person delegated with the authority of the corporation in that behalf,⁹⁰ does not make the master liable where a duty is enjoined by rule, etc., upon a servant and the duty is neglected or negligently performed.⁹¹

(vii) DEFECTS IN WAYS, WORKS, MACHINERY, ETC. The statutes in some of the states make the master liable where the injury results from defects in the ways, works, machinery, etc., not discovered or remedied owing to the negligence of some person intrusted by the master with the duty of seeing that they are in proper condition.⁹² Such provisions, which are elsewhere considered,⁹³ seem to be, at least, in part, merely a statutory reiteration of the common-law rule that the master cannot escape liability for the failure to furnish a safe place to

Statute as restricting common-law liability.—Burns Rev. St. (1901) § 7083, subd. 4, providing that a railroad company shall be liable for injuries to its employees caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, while performing a duty owed by the corporation to the employee injured, and while the latter is obeying an order from one having authority to direct, not only does not enlarge the company's common-law liability, but restricts it, so that the employee injured cannot recover unless he was obeying an order of a superior at the time of his injury. In other words, when the master commands or instructs, by rules and regulations and by-laws of himself, or in obedience to particular instructions given by any person delegated by him, with his authority in that behalf, and an employee obeys and carries out such commands or instructions, and injury is done thereby to a fellow employee, the master is liable. The statute has reference, by its terms, to the instructions of the master, and makes him responsible for them, and when he commands that an act be done or omitted to be done, and the servant obeys in doing the thing commanded to be done or in omitting to do what he was ordered not to do, his disobedience in either case is the act of the master, and if injury results he is liable; but, if the servant disobeys the instructions so given him, by doing something else that he was not instructed to do, or omits to obey instructions at all, and injury to his fellow servant is the result, it is not the act or command of the employer that caused the injury, but the disobedience of the employee, and the master is not liable. He stands in such a case as he stood, and is liable, if at all, at common law, unaffected by the Employers' Liability Act. Laughran v. Brewer, 113 Ala. 509, 21 So. 415.

(VIII) RAILROAD EMPLOYEE STATUTES—(A) In General—(1) STATUTES LIMITED TO RAILROAD EMPLOYEES. In a large number of the states the statutes modifying or abrogating the fellow servant rule are expressly limited to railroads or there are special provisions in the general statutes with reference thereto.⁹⁴

(2) COMPANIES AFFECTED—(a) IN GENERAL. Statutes relating to railroad companies do not apply to companies in no way engaged in railroading.⁹⁵ In other respects the statutes have been diversely construed by the courts with regard to what employers are to be deemed within their scope.⁹⁶ It has been held that the statutes apply only to railroads open to public travel or use,⁹⁷ and that they do not apply to persons or companies engaged in the construction of railroads,⁹⁸ nor to companies which have a merely incidental power to operate logging or mining roads or tram roads.⁹⁹

Laws (1887), c. 13, declaring that every railroad corporation "owning or operating" a railroad shall be liable to a servant for the negligence of his fellow servants except where the servant sustaining damages is at the time engaged in the construction of a railroad. Moran v. Eastern R. Co., 48 Minn. 46, 50 N. W. 930.

Lessor and lessee.—Iowa Code (1873), §§ 1278, 1307, making lessees of railroads liable, to the same extent as lessors, for injuries to employees caused by the negligence of co-employees, provides merely a cumulative remedy, and does not release the lessor corporation from liability for an injury to an employee, caused by an accident occurring while its road is operating in the corporate name, even though in fact it may have been leased, and was at the time controlled by, another company. *Bower v. In Minnesota the statute contains a proviso that nothing in the act shall be so construed as to render any railroad company liable for damages sustained by any employee "while engaged in the construction of a new road, or any part thereof, not open to public [travel or] use." Kline v. Minnesota Iron Co., 93 Minn. 63, 100 N. W. 681; Moran v. Eastern R. Co., 48 Minn. 46, 50 N. W. 930; Schneider v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 42 Minn. 68, 43 N. W. 783. Work in constructing a yard with tracks in it, to be used as a part of a railroad already open to the public, is not the construction of "a new road, or any part thereof," within the meaning of the statute. *Moran v. (b) STREET CAR COMPANIES. While there is some conflict in the authorities, the weight of authority is to the effect that street railroad companies are not within the scope of the statutes,¹ except where the statute expressly includes such companies.²

(c) RAILROADS IN HANDS OF RECEIVERS. In a number of states the statutes making railroad companies liable for injuries to a servant from the negligence of a fellow servant have been held to apply to railroad companies operated by receivers.³ In other states the contrary view is maintained.⁴

(b) Statutes as Applicable to All Injured Employees—(1) IN GENERAL. In some of the states the fellow servant rule is practically abrogated in so far as rail-

Power granted by charter.—The fact that a charter granted to a lumber company gave the company power to build railroads to facilitate the carrying on of its business does not make such company a railroad company, and liable as such for injuries to an employee. Ellington v. Beaver Dam Lumber Co., 93 Ga. 53, 19 S. E. 21.

Contra.—Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, 117 Ga. 414, 43 S. E. 751, 61 L. R. A. 249, holding that while street railroads may not be so dangerous as steam railroads, still they are railroad companies and within the purview of the statute.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 360.

Reason for rule not applicable in case of street railroads.—The many and great dangers to life and limb to which the numerous persons engaged in operating railroads whose cars are moved by steam are exposed, and the many different departments of labor in which such operators are employed, are doubtless the principal reasons which induce the modification of the rule of law heretofore governing the relation of master and servant and prescribing their reciprocal duties and liabilities. But these reasons for changing the law do not exist in respect to those engaged in operating street railroads. Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co., 61 Minn. 435, 63 N. W. 1099, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, 29 L. R. A. 208; Riley v. Galveston City R. Co., 13 Tex. Civ. App. 247, 35 S. W. 826, construing the act of May 4, 1893.

Effect of scope of charter.—If a corporation and its servants, who in fact are engaged only in operating a street railroad, are not covered by the fellow servant statute, then the fact that the charter of the corporation authorizes it to own and operate a trunk line steam railroad will not bring them within the statute, or estop the corporation from showing the fact. Sams v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 174 Mo. 53, 73 S. W. 686, 61 L. R. A. 475.

These decisions are based upon the principle that special statutes which relate expressly and exclusively to railroad companies cannot be held applicable to receivers of a railroad operating it under the orders of a court, for the reason that such receivers are not themselves railroad companies. Robinson v. Huidekoper, 98 Ga. 306, 25 S. E. 440; road employees are concerned.⁵ While all employees of a railroad company seem to be within the protection of some of the statutes,⁶ most of them apply only to injured employees engaged in the operation of the road or employed in work where they are subject to the hazards peculiar to railroading. In at least one state it is expressly provided by statute that the negligence must be connected with "the use and operation of a railway,"⁷ while in other states the statute is

In Florida the statute provides that if any person is injured by a railroad company by the running of the locomotives or cars or other machinery of such company, he being at the time of such injury an employee of the company, and the damage was caused by the negligence of another employee, and without fault or negligence on the part of the person injured, his employment by the company shall be no bar to a recovery. This statute limits the rule that an employee cannot recover for an injury occasioned by the negligence of a fellow servant to cases where the person injured was guilty of contributory negligence. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Wade, 46 Fla. 197, 35 So. 863. A person is not an employee within the statutes where when injured he is not engaged in the performance of his duties as such employee or has quit for the day and is engaged in the pursuit of his own ends. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Wade, supra.

In Wisconsin the statute has been amended several times and its provisions are somewhat different from those in other states. Under the statute of 1880 the company is liable when the injury results from the negligence of certain employees, including an engineer or superintendent. Albrecht v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 94 Wis. 397, 69 N. W. 63. The word "superintendent" applies only to one having to do with the movement of trains and cars and does not include the foreman of a repair shop (Hartford v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 91 Wis. 374, 64 N. W. 1033), although it does include the foreman of a switching crew (Pier v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 94 Wis. 357, 68 N. W. 464). The provision in the 1893 statute for the benefit of employees engaged in "operating, running, riding upon or switching" trains or cars applies to a freight handler injured by being run into by an engine while pushing a car to the freight house (Ean v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 95 Wis. 69, 69 N. W. 997), but not to one sealing the door of a car and injured by the backing of an engine (Hibbard v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 96 Wis. 443, 71 N. W. 807), nor to a conductor standing by a car for the purpose of watching a switch and closing the car door when it was unloaded, where struck and injured by a bundle negligently thrown from the car by co-employees (Medbury v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 106 Wis. 191, 81 N. W. 659); nor to a car repairer injured by a train running into the stationary car in which he was at work (Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 91 Wis. 503, 65 N. W. 183). Negligent track laborers are not "engaged in the discharge of their duties," within the statute, while riding on hand-cars furnished them by the company for their convenience in reaching their boarding place to get their meals (Benson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 78 Minn. 303, 80 N. W. 1050, construing Wisconsin statute); but the contrary is held where the master agrees to transport a servant to and from the place of work by the hand-cars, and the employment covered the whole time they were absent from the place they lived (Wallin v. Eastern R. Co., 83 Minn. 149, 86 N. W. 76, 54 L. R. A. 481, construing Wisconsin statute).

6. Southern R. Co. v. Johnson, 114 Ga. 329, 40 S. E. 235 (holding that an employee is entitled to recover where the injury was occasioned by the defective work of other employees without fault of plaintiff); Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Goldwire, 56 Ga. 196; Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Ayers, 53 Ga. 12 (holding that a track laborer may recover for injuries received by being carried from the place of his work to the camp where he stays at night through the negligence of those in charge of the train).

In Georgia a railroad employee is entitled to recover whether or not his injuries are connected with the running of trains (Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Miller, 90 Ga. 571, 16 S. E. 939; Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Brown, 86 Ga. 320, 12 S. E. 812; Georgia R. Co. v. Ivey, 73 Ga. 499; Thompson v. Central R., etc., Co., 54 Ga. 509. But see Central Trust Co. v. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 69 Fed. 353), or even intimately connected with the maintenance or operation of the railroad (Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Hicks, 95 Ga. 301, 22 S. E. 613).

In North Carolina the fellow servant rule seems to be entirely abolished as to railroad companies and an injured employee is entitled to recover where injured in the course of his service or employment whether he is running a train or rendering any other service. Mabry v. North Carolina R. Co., 139 N. C. 388, 52 S. E. 124; Sigman v. Southern R. Co., 135 N. C. 181, 47 S. E. 420; Mott v. Southern R. Co., 131 N. C. 234, 42 S. E. 601. However, the statute does not apply to that part of a railroad which is merely in course of construction and is not actually being operated. Nicholson v. Transylvania R. Co., 138 N. C. 516, 51 S. E. 40.

7. See Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. O'Brien, 132

broad enough to include all injured employees of a railroad but is limited by judicial construction to injured employees engaged in work at the time of the accident which exposes them to some element of hazard or condition of danger

Fed. 593, 67 C. C. A. 421 (construing Iowa statute); O'Brien v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 116 Fed. 502.

In Iowa, to authorize a recovery under this statute, the employee must show: (1) That he belongs to the class of employees to whom the statute affords a remedy; and (2) that the act which occasioned the injury was of the class of acts for which a remedy is given. Malone v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 65 Iowa 417, 21 N. W. 756, 54 Am. Rep. 11. The accident must grow out of the use and operation of the road. Schroeder v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 41 Iowa 344. But the injured employee, in order to be entitled to recover, need not be employed in the operation of the road if he was injured by its operation (Pierce v. Central Iowa R. Co., 73 Iowa 140, 34 N. W. 783), it being sufficient that he is engaged in work which exposes him to the dangers peculiar to the operation of a railroad (Williams v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 121 Iowa 270, 96 N. W. 774; Keatley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 94 Iowa 685, 63 N. W. 560), at the time of the accident (Akeson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 106 Iowa 54, 75 N. W. 676). The applicability of the statute to an employee depends upon the nature of the hazards to which he is actually exposed, and not of those which may have been contemplated in his employment. Canon v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 101 Iowa 613, 70 N. W. 755. His employment need not be connected with the running of trains where it requires him to go thereon. Schroeder v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 47 Iowa 375. The words "use and operation" of a railroad refer only to the movement of cars, engines, trains, or machinery on the track. Akeson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., supra; Stroble v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 70 Iowa 555, 31 N. W. 63, 59 Am. Rep. 456; Deputy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 110, 84 S. W. 103, construing Iowa statute. Contra, see Smith v. Humeston, etc., R. Co., 78 Iowa 583, 43 N. W. 545. The work of the injured employee must be connected in some manner with the moving and not merely work preparatory thereto which may be done away from the train. Akeson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., supra; Stroble v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., supra. The company is liable, although the negligent servant was under the control of the injured servant. Houser v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 60 Iowa 230, 14 N. W. 778, 46 Am. Rep. 65.

The running of trains over a railroad in constructing it is "operating" the railroad. Mace v. Boedker, 127 Iowa 721, 104 N. W. 475; McKnight v. Iowa, etc., R. Constr. Co., 43 Iowa 406; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Haley, 25 Kan. 35 (holding that a person employed on a construction train, to carry water to the men, and to gather up tools and care for them, was within the protection of the statute); Roe v. Winston, 86 Minn. 77, 90 N. W. 122 (construing Wisconsin statute). But see Mitchell v. Wabash R. Co., 97 Mo. App. 411, 76 S. W. 647 (holding that the injury is not connected with the "operation" of a railroad where the work is the reconstruction of an old and abandoned track preparatory to a resumption of its use as a railroad); Nicholson v. Transylvania R. Co., 138 N. C. 516, 51 S. E. 40 (holding that where the injury occurred in construction work at a point five or six miles from the completed track and further from the track on which trains were operated, it was not connected with the work of a "railroad company operating in this state").

The transfer of freight by a railroad company from a vessel to its cars is "operating a railroad." Daley v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 147 Mass. 101, 16 N. E. 690.

In Missouri the injured servant must be engaged "in the work of operating such railroad." Callahan v. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal R. Co., 170 Mo. 473, 71 S. W. 208, 94 Am. St. Rep. 746, 60 L. R. A. 249 [affirmed in 194 U. S. 628, 24 S. Ct. 857, 48 L. ed. 1157] (holding that a section hand stationed in the street below a railroad track to warn other members of the section gang when it was safe for them to throw ties taken from a railroad into the street and to warn pedestrians and remove the ties from the street, where injured by being struck by a tie negligently thrown by the gang without being notified that it was safe to do so, while he was engaged in removing a child from a place of danger in the street, was engaged in the work of operating such railroad); St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 90 S. W. 926 (construing Missouri statute and holding that a brakeman in the discharge of his duties lighting lamps in a caboose, which was being switched so as to attach it to his train, when he was injured in a collision, was engaged in operating the railroad). A section hand whose duty it is to assist in repairing the track on a railroad is engaged in operating a railroad (Thompson v. Chappell, 91 Mo. App. 297), and is within the protection of the statute where injured while riding on a hand-car by the negligence of a fellow servant (Overton v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 111 Mo. App. 613, 86 S. W. 503; Rice v. Wabash R. Co., 92 Mo. App. 35). The replacing old rails with new ones is embraced within the work of operating the railroad. Stubbs v. Omaha, etc., R. Co., 85 Mo. App. 192. On the other hand the injured employee need not be actually engaged in the operation of trains thereon (Callahan v. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal R. Co., 170 Mo. 473, 71 S. W. 208, 94 Am. St. Rep. 746, 60 L. R. A. 249 [affirmed in 194 U. S. 628, 24 S. Ct. 857, 48 L. ed. 1157], holding that the statute includes all servants whose work is directly necessary for the running of trains over a track and therefore includes section hands engaged in repairing the road, it being peculiar to railroads.⁸ These statutes in those states where the liability is limited have been held to apply to the following injured servants: Foreman of repair gang;⁹ section man¹⁰ engaged in repairing the track¹¹ or in propelling or riding on a hand-car or taking it from the track;¹² laborer on construction train who rides on the train;¹³ laborer loading car of dirt train where injured by fall of impending bank;¹⁴ employee whose duty it was to ride on train and remove snow obstructions as encountered;¹⁵ employee operating ditching machine carried on car and worked by movement of car;¹⁶ detective walking along track to discover persons guilty of obstructing it and injured from being run into by engine while insensible on the track;¹⁷ car repairer or cleaner working on car standing on side track;¹⁸ car inspector;¹⁹ employees loading and unloading car by means of cable²⁰ or locomotive;²¹ employee standing between track and warehouse, working on warehouse, and injured by moving train;²² yard employee injured while stepping from platform to top of passing car;²³ fireman sorting and discarding waste material from the coal while firing engine;²⁴ employee whose business it is to sufficient that he is engaged in some service that it is necessary to the movement of trains (Stubbs v. Omaha, etc., R. Co., supra).

8. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Medaris, 60 Kan. 151, 55 Pac. 875; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Haley, 25 Kan. 35; Union Trust Co. v. Thomason, 25 Kan. 1; Pope v. Great Northern R. Co., 94 Minn. 429, 103 N. W. 331, construing Wisconsin statute.

In Kansas the Iowa statute of 1862 was adopted but the Iowa statute was changed in 1873 and the Kansas statute which remains the same seems broader than the Iowa statute. The statute of 1901 making a railroad liable to an employee for the negligence of its agents and for mismanagement by its engineers or other employees does not create a distinction between agents on the one hand and engineers and other employees on the other, nor between negligence and mismanagement. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Kellerman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 87 S. W. 401.

In Minnesota, the statute, if given a liberal construction, applies to all employees of railroad companies under all circumstances. But, to avoid constitutional objections, it was limited by judicial construction to such employees as were exposed to the particular and peculiar hazards connected with the use and operation of railroads. Weisel v. Eastern R. Co., 79 Minn. 245, 82 N. W. 576; Blomquist v. Great Northern R. Co., 65 Minn. 69, 67 N. W. 804; Pearson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 47 Minn. 9, 49 N. W. 302; *Johnson v. In this state there is a class of cases on the border line where a like injury might have resulted in other work than railroad work, but where the work must be done in great haste to avoid danger from passing trains, to which the statute has been held to apply. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co., 74 Minn. 432, 77 N. W. 240; Blomquist v. Great Northern R. Co., supra.

there is a statutory provision making a railroad company liable for all damages sustained by any servant while "engaged in the work of operating the cars, locomotives or trains" by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant.⁴³ It has been held that such statute is not limited to train crews but includes a switchman employed in coupling cars while a train was being made up in the yard,⁴⁴ and employees operating locomotives in yards, at stations, roundhouses, or coal chutes.⁴⁵ An employee is not engaged in "operating" while on his way to take charge of a locomotive.⁴⁶ Merely loading or unloading a car is not "operating" it,⁴⁷ although if the employee not only loads and unloads but also works in connection with the transfer of the car to another place, he is engaged in operating it.⁴⁸ The operation of cars includes hand-cars,⁴⁹ and push cars.⁵⁰ Placing a hand-car on the track is operating it,⁵¹ as is the removing it from the track.⁵²

Who is in charge of engine.—The engineer is usually the employee in charge of the engine (Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Bergschicker, 162 Ind. 108, 69 N. E. 1000), although a fireman may be an employee in charge of an engine (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Goss, 137 Ala. 319, 34 So. 1007, holding, however, that a fireman moving levers while the engineer is working under the engine according to the orders of the engineer is not in charge of the engine; Brown v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 111 Ala. 275, 19 So. 1001). Of course two employees cannot be in control of an engine at the same time. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Richardson, 100 Ala. 232, 14 So. 209.

Engine upon a railroad.—Where the statute refers to an engine upon a railroad it does not include an engine which is stalled in a roundhouse for the purpose of repairs. Perry v. Old Colony R. Co., 164 Mass. 296, 41 N. E. 289.

What is a locomotive engine.—A pile-driver, consisting of a steam engine placed on a flat car at one end and a driver used in raising the hammer at the other end, all forming one machine, capable of self-propulsion by means of a sprocket wheel on the axle under the boiler, connected by a chain with the engine, the chain being removed when driving a pile, is not a "locomotive engine." Jarvis v. Hitch, 161 Ind. 217, 67 N. E. 1057 [reversing in effect (App. 1902) 65 N. E. 608]. A steam crane fixed on a movable truck has been held not a locomotive engine. Murphy v. Wilson, 47 J. P. 565, car,⁵⁴ train,⁵⁵ points,⁵⁶ switch,⁵⁷ switch yard,⁵⁸ signal,⁵⁹ track,⁶⁰ etc.⁶¹ These statutes are generally held not to apply to street railroads.⁶² The railroad company is liable thereunder, although no gross or wilful negligence is shown,⁶³ and without regard to the company having used due care in selecting its employees.⁶⁴

(2) EMPLOYEES IN CHARGE OF TRAIN—(a) WHAT CONSTITUTES A TRAIN. The courts have refused to define what, under all circumstances, will constitute a train, within the meaning of the statute.⁶⁵ It has been said, however, that a locomotive with one or more cars attached to it, with or without passengers or freight, in motion upon a railroad from one point to another, by means of power furnished

Control for special purpose.—If a person who has charge or control of a car only for the purpose of bringing it to rest on a track places it in a dangerous position thereon, and an injury results in consequence, the master is liable. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Burton, 97 Ala. 240, 12 So. 88.

Unfinished track.—It is not necessary that the defective track occasioning the injury to a brakeman should be finished or in charge of a regular section foreman. But if it has reached such a stage of construction as to become "the track of a railway," and has been adopted for use, the case is within the statute regardless of whether the negligent employee was the section foreman or a construction foreman. Southern R. Co. v. Howell, 135 Ala. 639, 34 So. 6.

by the locomotive, constitutes a train.⁶⁶ The term generally signifies cars in motion,⁶⁷ with power furnished by a locomotive,⁶⁸ although a train does not cease to be such when moving by its own momentum after the power is shut off from the locomotive.⁶⁹

(b) WHO IS IN CHARGE OR CONTROL OF TRAIN. The words "charge or control" have not been defined, although it would seem that they are not intended to mean different things, but are to be regarded, while not perhaps as synonymous, as explanatory of each other, and, used together, as describing more fully one and the same thing.⁷⁰ It is the charge or control of the train as a connected whole which is meant, rather than the charge or control of portions which together form a whole,⁷¹ although a person in charge of a train does not necessarily cease to have charge because some of the cars are uncoupled in order to be separately dealt with.⁷² A person is in charge or control where for the time being at least he has immediate authority to direct the movements and management of the train as a whole, and of the men engaged upon it.⁷³ It is not necessary that he should be actually upon the train itself,⁷⁴ and more than one person may have "charge or control" of a train at the same time.⁷⁵ The conductor is usually an employee in charge of a train,⁷⁶ as is an engineer.⁷⁷ So it has been held that a yard master whose right to control and cause the moving of cars in the yard is exclusive and whose orders to the switching crew are obeyed is a person in control of a train within the statutes.⁷⁸ On the other hand the foreman of a switching gang,⁷⁹

Locomotive not attached.—Whether a number of cars coupled together and in motion, and forming one connected whole, constitute a train, does not depend upon whether a locomotive engine is attached to them at the time and they are moved by the power thus supplied. If the cars are moving from one point to another upon a railroad, under an impetus imparted to them by a locomotive which shortly before the accident has been detached, they constitute a train. Caron v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 164 Mass. 523, 42 N. E. 112.

(d) Common Service Statutes. In some states the statute provides that all railroad employees in the same grade of employment and who are working together at the same time and place and to a common purpose, neither being intrusted with the power to control employees, are fellow servants, provided they are in the same department or branch of service.⁸³ In order to be fellow servants under statutes of this character, employees must (1) be engaged in the common service,⁸⁴ (2) in the same grade of employment,⁸⁵ (3) working at the same time and Employee riding in caboose.—An employee of a railroad company who in obedience to an order of the company travels in the caboose of a freight train to reach a point where he has been assigned to work, but who takes no part in the running of the train, is not a fellow servant of the engineer of the train. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Norris, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 29 S. W. 950.

84. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Patterson, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 48 S. W. 747, (Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 442.

“‘Service’ means the thing or work being performed for the employer at the time of the accident and out of which it grew, and ‘common’ means that which pertains equally to the employees sought to be held fellow servants; and therefore ‘common service’ means the particular thing or work being performed for the employer, at the time of the accident and out of which it grew, jointly by the employees sought to be held fellow servants. The members of a crew running a train, though each be in the performance of different acts in reference thereto, are all ‘engaged in the common service,’ for they are jointly performing the thing or work of managing the train for the employer; but they would not be ‘engaged in the common service’ with the members of a crew running another train for the employer over the same road, for one crew would be jointly performing the thing or work of managing one train while the other would be jointly performing the thing or work of managing the other train. We, therefore, conclude that the engineer and switchman were ‘engaged in the common service.’” Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Warner, 89 Tex. 475, 478, 35 S. W. 364.

Illustrations of employees not engaged in common service.—Where a brakeman was struck by a passing switch engine while he was inspecting the couplings of his train and such engine was not engaged in any service or performing any act in reference to said train, the members of the two train crews are not engaged in a common service. Patterson v. Houston, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 442, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 48 S. W. 747.

85. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Butshek, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 194, 78 S. W. 740.

When servants are of same grade.—It has been said that “grade” means the rank or relative positions occupied by the employees while engaged in the common service. This definition, however, furnishes no test to determine whether given employees are in the same or different grades. However, the use of the clause in the statute “neither of such persons being entrusted with any superintendence or control over their fellow employees,” etc., was held to be explanatory of what was meant by the clause “in the same grade” so that the test was held to be whether one servant was invested with authority or control over others while engaged in the common service. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Warner, 89 Tex. 475, 35 S. W. 364. Pursuant to this construction of the statutes it was held that a conductor and engineer were of the same grade (Moore v. Jones, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 39 S. W. 593), and also the fireman and engineer (Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Becker, 63 Ark. 477, 39 S. W. 358), but that a locomotive engineer having supervision of the men under him and a fire-knocker having no men under him were not of the same grade of employment (St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Thurmond, 70 Ark. 411, 68 S. W. 488). In Texas, however, under the 1897 amendment of the statute, the provision as to superintendence and control is omitted and it is now held that employees are not necessarily “in the same grade of employment,” although neither has authority or control over the other, and that such authority is not the test but rather the order of promotion, skill in the service, and the relative amount of compensation received. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Elmore, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 56, 79 S. W. 891 (holding that a brakeman and a station porter were not in the same grade of employment).

In Utah it has been held that a miner is not a fellow servant with one whose duty it is to manage and operate a cage by which the miners are conveyed in and out of the mine, nor with one employed as a “tool carrier,” whose only duty is to take sharpened tools into the mine and throw them off at the various levels and bring up the dull ones. Jenkins v. Mammoth Min. Co.,

"While 'at' indicates nearness in time and place, it does not demand an exact co-incident as to either, but only that it shall be sufficiently so to afford the employes a reasonable opportunity of observing the conduct of each other with a view of guarding themselves against injury therefrom." *Gulf, etc., R. in the yards.⁴ An engineer is not necessarily a fellow servant of the train despatcher and telegraph operators.⁵

H. Actions¹—1. IN GENERAL—a. Nature and Form of Remedy.² A servant's common-law right of action against his master for negligence is not abolished by the enactment of an Employers' Liability Act,³ and both at common law and under such acts the servant's remedy is properly by an action ex delicto,⁴ although the duty owed by the master was imposed by the contract of service, as well as by law, by reason of their relation.⁵ Plaintiff may, however, be required to elect, at the time of trial,⁶ between a statutory and a common-law count,⁷ and a cause of action under one provision of a statute cannot also be set out as a separate cause under another and distinct provision.⁸ A statutory right of action is not taken away or in any way affected by a provision imposing a penalty for the violation of the statute.⁹

b. Grounds and Conditions Precedent—(i) GROUNDS. In an action by an employee to recover for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant in performing some act in defendant's service, plaintiff must show either that he was free from fault himself, or that there was negligence on the part of his fellow servant.¹⁰

(ii) CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—(A) Return of Money Received After Injury. Unless accepted in compromise of his claim, a servant is not bound as a condition precedent to his right of action, to return money received for wages and medical attention after the accident.¹¹

(B) Notice of Injury¹²—(1) NECESSITY. In some jurisdictions the Employers'

Co., 99 N. Y. App. Div. 603, 91 N. Y. Suppl. 657. See also The Clatsop Chief, 8 Fed. 767, 7 Sawy. 279, holding that the statutory remedy given by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4493 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3058], does not exclude the right to any other remedy which may be given by the general admiralty law.

4. Action ex delicto.—Obanhein v. Arbuckle, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 465, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 133, holding that where a servant, knowing that his tools are defective, is induced to continue work by the master's promise to supply proper tools shortly, and meanwhile to indemnify the servant for any injury, and the servant sustains injuries from the defective tools, an action for damages must be in tort, for the negligence, and not on the promise. 12. Pleading notice of injury see infra, IV, H, 2, a, (iv), (b).

Liability Acts require a notice of injury to be given within a prescribed time thereafter as a condition precedent to a right of action under the statute.¹³ Such requirements apply only to those cases which lie outside the common law and within the statute, or to a case in which a servant, although he has a remedy at common law, relies on the statute alone;¹⁴ and even where the action is brought under a statute, the failure to give notice may be excused under certain circumstances, as where there is reasonable excuse for the want of it, and no prejudice has resulted to the master.¹⁵

(2) SUFFICIENCY. While it has been decided that a notice of injury need not be expressed in strictly technical language,¹⁶ it should nevertheless clearly state, in 13. Colorado.—Sess. Laws (1893), p. 129, c. 77, requires as a condition to recover the service of notice of injury on the employer within sixty days after the occurrence (*Lange v. Union Pac. R. Lack of means and inability to transact business.—Where it was shown that plaintiff was without means and for some weeks after the accident was unable to transact any business and that defendant's business manager and representative saw the accident and arranged for plaintiff's admission into the hospital, where a few days later he discussed with him the cause of the accident, it was held that the circumstances excused the want of notice of injury. Lever v. McArthur, 9 Brit. Col. 417.

The knowledge of defendant of the injury and the cause of it at the time it occurs is, in case of death, a reasonable excuse for the want of notice of injury, where there is no evidence that defendant was in any way prejudiced in his defense by the want of it. *Armstrong v. writing,¹⁷ all the particulars required by the statute;¹⁸ be signed by plaintiff or his duly authorized agent;¹⁹ and be served, within the time prescribed by law,²⁰ by plaintiff or his agent,²¹ upon defendant or his duly authorized agent.²² Under the English and Massachusetts statutes, however, a defect or inaccuracy in a notice of injury which does not prejudice defendant, and which is not for the purpose of misleading him, will not vitiate the notice;²³ while in Ontario defendant, in order to take advantage of the want of notice or of a defective notice, must give formal notice of his objection not less than seven days before the hearing of the action.²⁴

(3) VARIANCE. Where a notice of injury served by plaintiff was addressed to defendant and alleged that on the date of plaintiff's injury he was in defendant's employ as a street car conductor, he could not claim on the trial that the evidence showed that he was employed by a certain railway company other than defendant, and that there was no evidence that such company and defendant were identical.²⁵

27. Alabama.—A railroad may be sued in the state of its domicile for a tort committed in another state. Helton v. Alabama Midland R. Co., 97 Ala. 275, 12 So. 276.

Arkansas.—A resident of Arkansas may sue in any county in Arkansas through which a railroad passes for personal injuries received in another state. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 67 Ark. 295, 54 S. W. 865.

Georgia.—An action is maintainable in the county where the employee was injured (Christian v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 79 Ga. 460, 7 S. E. 216; Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Oaks, 52 Ga. 410; Thomas v. Georgia R., etc., Co., 38 Ga. 222), and a railroad company operating in the state may be sued there for an injury received in another state (Watson

d. Parties—(i) IN GENERAL. Where it appears from the evidence that a lessee is but an agent of the owner, a recovery for an injury to a servant employed in or about the property may be had of the owner.²⁸ An unincorporated association can be sued by a servant to recover for personal injuries only in the names of its members.²⁹

(ii) JOINDER.³⁰ In an action by a servant to recover for personal injuries it is permissible to join with the master as parties defendant the servants through whose negligence the injury was received;³¹ and in Iowa a railroad company which has purchased the road of another company, and which has assumed the payment of all claims against the vendor company, is properly joined as a co-defendant with the vendor in an action for personal injuries sustained by a servant while in the employ of the latter.³²

(iii) MISJOINDER. In an action by a servant, who was in the employment of two railroad companies at a point where they used a common track, and who was injured while performing a duty for one of the companies only, disconnected from any service performed for the other, the latter is not a proper party defendant.³³ The presence of a superfluous defendant will not, however, prevent a servant from obtaining such relief as he is entitled to against the proper defendant.³⁴

e. Defenses. It is no defense to an action by a servant to recover for personal injuries that the legal title to the staging which he was ordered to use was not in the master,³⁵ or that it had been previously used without accident;³⁶ and where a servant was injured while attempting to save the life of another, it is no defense that the negligence of the person whose rescue was attempted contributed

North Carolina.—Where a servant of a railroad company operating in the state is injured in another state by the negligence of a fellow servant, an action for such injuries is in contract, not in tort, and, in the absence of any showing as to where the contract was made, the North Carolina court has jurisdiction, applying, however, the fellow servant act of the other state. Williams v. Southern R. Co., 128 N. C. 286, 38 S. E. 893.

Texas.—An action for an injury resulting from negligence merely, and which does not amount to a "trespass" under Rev. St. art. 1198, par. 8, should be brought in the county where the master resides, and not in the county where the injury happened (Connor v. Saunders, 81 Tex. 633, 17 S. W. 236 [reversing 9 Tex. Civ. App. 56, 29 S. W. 1140]; Ricker v. Shoemaker, 81 Tex. 22, 16 S. W. 645); but an action against a railroad may be brought either in the county in which the injury occurred, or in the county in which plaintiff resided at the time of the injury (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Rogers, (Civ. App. 1903) 82 S. W. 822), and in determining the venue, the place where an employer of a railroad establishes his headquarters, boards, and sleeps, is his residence (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Rogers, supra. Compare Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Cloyd, (Civ. App. 1903) 78 S. W. 43), where the laws of another jurisdiction governing liability for negligence, and the procedure for their enforcement differ from those of Texas, the courts of Texas will refuse to take jurisdiction of an action against a railroad by a servant who entered its service in such other jurisdiction, and was injured there (Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Jackson, 89 Tex. 107, 33 S. W. 857, 59 Am. St. Rep. 28, 31 L. R. A. 276 [reversing (Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 230].

29. Standard Light, etc., Co. v. Muncey, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 416, 76 S. W. 931, in which certain bondholders of an electric corporation, which was in the hands of a receiver, were engaged in reconstructing a portion of the company's lines under the receiver's permission, and it was held that the fact that, when sued as the "Bondholders of the Dallas Electric Company," they appeared and answered under the same name, did not justify a judgment against them under such appellation.

to the peril, nor that plaintiff was an employee of defendant.³⁷ On the other hand a servant cannot recover damages for an injury caused by his violation of a penal statute, although the master may have directed such violation or sanctioned the continuance of a custom contrary to law.³⁸ Where the defense of assumption of risk is maintained, questions of contributory negligence do not arise, because, if plaintiff assumed the risk, he cannot recover, although he exercised the highest degree of care.³⁹

f. Conflict of Laws. When an action against a railroad company to recover damages for personal injuries to a servant while in its employ is tried in a different state from that in which the contract of employment was made, and in which the injury was received, the right of recovery and the rule as to what conduct on his part shall or shall not constitute a defense to the action are governed by the lex loci, so that a constitutional provision of the lex loci, providing that knowledge of a defect by the servant shall not be a defense, is properly charged, where applicable.⁴⁰

2. PLEADING⁴¹ — a. Declaration, Petition, or Complaint⁴² — (1) IN GENERAL. The declaration, petition, or complaint in an action by a servant against his master to recover for personal injuries is governed by the general rules of law respecting pleading.⁴³ While no express form of words is necessary the declaration or complaint must set out with certainty and definiteness all facts necessary to constitute a cause of action,⁴⁴ and, in particular, it must show the existence of the relation

The declaration, petition, or complaint against a master for personal injuries to a servant must contain an averment of negligence on the part of defendant, or someone for whom he is responsible.⁵² But, while it is not sufficient to charge negligence in general terms as a conclusion of law, and while it must be shown in what the negligence complained of consisted,⁵³ the particular acts or omissions which constitute and

Old Colony R. Co., 156 Mass. 262, 30 N. E. 1137.

Where a complaint alleges two causes of action, the first conforming in all respects to the Employers' Liability Act, and the second, which attempts to plead an action for ordinary negligence vesting in the servant's administrator, alleges that plaintiff's intestate was in the employ of defendant when the injuries complained of were sustained and facts bringing the cause of action within the scope of the Employers' Liability Act, but failed to allege the service of notice, it is insufficient. *Crosby v. Voss, 62 N. J. L. 59, 41 Atl. 224, holding that a general averment of negligence in failing to make and enforce reasonable and proper rules and regulations for the guidance of employees, or in the operation of defendant's railroad yards, is not ment, say, as a matter of law, that negligence was not sufficiently pleaded.⁵⁵ In all cases some causal connection must be shown between the acts of negligence and the injury sustained.⁵⁶

(B) Particular Averments—(1) DUTY OWED BY MASTER. In an action by a servant to recover for personal injuries, the declaration or complaint must show the particular duty toward the servant which the master failed to perform,⁵⁷ which may be implied from the facts stated,⁵⁸ and a mere allegation of duty without stating the facts on which it rests is insufficient.⁵⁹ A demurrer will lie to a declaration or complaint which charges a higher degree of care than the law imposes.⁶⁰

Care of inexperienced minor.—In an action by a boy sixteen years old, a complaint which alleges that defendant, knowing plaintiff, an employee, to be inexperienced, ignorant, and incapable in respect to the dangers of machinery, permitted him to remain alone in close proximity thereto, while it was in motion, resulting in plaintiff's contact therewith and injury therefrom, sufficiently alleges defendant's negligence. *White v. Failure to use reasonable care.—A complaint which shows that defendants failed to use reasonable care to provide plaintiff a safe place of work while in their employ is sufficient. Indiana Stone Co. v. Stewart, 7 Ind. App. 563, 34 N. E. 1019. See also Bonner v. Moore, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 416, 22 S. (2) MASTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF DEFECTS AND DANGERS. In an action by a servant against his master to recover for injuries caused by defective or dangerous appliances or places, it must be alleged that the master knew, or ought to have known, of the alleged defects.⁶¹ But a direct averment of actual or constructive knowledge is unnecessary, where it is necessarily implied from the facts alleged;⁶² gently failed to furnish a coupling knife," does not require the highest degree of care in furnishing appliances, and is sufficient, as against a general demurrer, although it does not allege ordinary care as the extent of defendant's duty.

The averment should be that defendant knew, or, but for the want of reasonable care and diligence, would have known, of the defect. An allegation that defendant knew or was bound to know of the existence of the defect is bad. Cox v. Providence Gas Co., 17 R. I. 199, 21 Atl. 344.

Where the defects alleged are defects in construction, it is not necessary to aver knowledge thereof in defendant. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hines, 33 Ill. App. 271 [affirmed in 132 Ill. 161, 23 N. E. 1021, 22 Am. St. Rep. 515].

Facts showing that defendant knew need not be averred. St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Scheiber, 65 Ill. App. 304.

The exact time when defendant learned of the defect need not be alleged. Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Morgan, 132 Ind. 430, 31 N. E. 661, 32 N. E. 85. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Tackett, 33 Ind. App. 379, 71 N. E. 524, holding that the length of time defendant had knowledge of the defect is immaterial, it being alleged that he did have knowledge.

Reasonable time to remove defect after notice need not be alleged. Woodward Iron Co. v. Jones, 80 Ala. 123.

62. Alabama.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hawkins, 92 Ala. 241, 9 So. 271, holding that an averment that a defect had not been discovered or remedied, owing to defendant's negligence, imports that it had existed long enough to have been discovered and remedied, had defendant used due care.

Illinois.—Illinois Steel Co. v. Ostrowski, 194 Ill. 376, 62 N. E. 822 [affirming 93 Ill. App. 57] (allegation that defendant allowed the machine to become old and worn, and neglected to make proper inspection thereof); Owens v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 115 Ill. App. 142 (allegation of injury by reason of the failure of the master to furnish a safe place to work).

Indiana.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Sears, 136 Ind. 460, 34 N. E. 15, 36 N. E. 353 (allegation that defendant had negligently maintained the bridge for five years preceding the injury); Louisville, etc., Consol. R. Co. v. Utz, 133 Ind. 265, 32 N. E. 881; Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Percy, 128 Ind. 197, 27 N. E. 479 (both holding complaint sufficient if it avers that the company had negligently furnished the defective coupling which caused the injury, or had negligently failed to furnish safe and suitable couplings); Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187 (general averment that defendant negligently left a sliver or splint projecting from the rail); Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Lindsay, 33 Ind.

and a general allegation of knowledge by defendant of the defect is sufficient to include constructive as well as actual knowledge.⁶³

(3) OWNERSHIP, POSSESSION, OR CONTROL OF INSTRUMENTALITY OR PLACE. The declaration or complaint in an action by a servant for personal injuries must allege that the instrumentality or place, whose defective or dangerous condition occasioned the injury, was owned or controlled by the master.⁶⁴

(4) ACTS OR OMISSIONS THROUGH AGENTS OR REPRESENTATIVES. In an action by a servant to recover for personal injuries, an allegation that the negligence relied on was that of defendant is good, as against a demurrer, although in point of fact the negligence was that of a servant for whom defendant, as master, was responsible.⁶⁵ The negligence may, however, be charged as that of the servant, where the facts alleged show that it consists of a breach of a non-assignable duty,⁶⁶ or it may be charged in the alternative as that of defendant, his servants, or agents, the object being to charge negligence against defendant acting through his servants or agents.⁶⁷ It is not sufficient to show a state of facts which merely suggests that a co-servant may have owed a duty which he neglected.⁶⁸

App. 404, 70 N. E. 283, 998 (allegation that railroad yard had been carelessly left, so as to be rotted by time); Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 11 Ind. App. 588, 37 N. E. 43, 39 N. E. 767 (allegation of negligence in improperly loading cars, so that the coal projected above the sides upwards of a foot, without any support, implies notice of defect). But see New Kentucky Coal Co. v. Albani, 12 Ind. App. 497, 40 N. E. 702, holding that an allegation that the master negligently furnished defective and unsafe appliance is not equivalent to an allegation of knowledge.

Iowa.—O'Connor v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 83 Iowa 105, 48 N. W. 1002, holding that an allegation that the master negligently furnished defective and unsafe appliances is equivalent to an allegation that he knew or should have known that they were defective and unsafe.

Kentucky.—Wilson v. Alpine Coal Co., 118 Ky. 463, 81 S. W. 278, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 337, holding sufficient an allegation that the mine was in an unsafe and dangerous condition by reason of the carelessness and negligence of defendant.

Missouri.—Crane v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 87 Mo. 588, holding that an allegation that defendant negligently furnished defective and unsafe appliance is equivalent to an allegation of knowledge. See also Hall v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 74 Mo. 298, holding sufficient an allegation that the railroad company negligently permitted a loose iron rail to remain upon the path alongside the track used by switchmen.

Nebraska.—Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 55 Nebr. 748, 76 N. W. 462, holding that an averment that defendant negligently permitted a certain appliance to become defective and negligently suffered it to remain in a defective condition implies that he knew, or was culpably ignorant, of the defect.

Foreign cars.—Where an accident occurs to a railroad employee in consequence of the introduction of a foreign and defectively constructed car into the train on which he is employed, and he sues the railroad for damages, he is not bound to allege in his petition that the accident was caused by the introduction of the foreign car. (5) NEGLECT OF STATUTORY DUTY. Where the negligence alleged to have caused the injury consists of the breach of a duty imposed by statute the declaration or complaint must set out facts bringing the case within its terms.⁶⁹ As a general rule it is sufficient to allege that the injury resulted from a breach of the statute duty,⁷⁰ without alleging in what manner the failure to comply with the statute caused the injury;⁷¹ or that plaintiff had no knowledge of the defect or danger;⁷² or, where the negligence consists in the failure to guard a machine, that the machine was dangerous.⁷³ Where the allegations bring the case within the statute, it will be construed as a statutory not a common-law action,⁷⁴ and in such a case the statute itself need not be recited or referred to,⁷⁵ nor is it necessary to negative exceptions in the statute which do not apply to the particular duty for whose breach the action is brought.⁷⁶

(6) LIABILITY IMPOSED BY STATUTE. Where the liability sought to be enforced is imposed by statute, the declaration or complaint in an action by a servant to recover for personal injuries must allege facts which clearly bring the case within the statute.⁷⁷

Bill of particulars.—Where a complaint stated that defendant failed to provide lawful safeguards, that one of such safeguards was lacking, and that the place provided for plaintiff to work was unsafe, defendant was entitled to a bill of particulars stating the particular safeguard claimed to have been omitted, and in what respect the place provided to work in was unsafe. *O'Leary v. 77. Under Ala. Code (1896), § 1749, subs. 1, it must be averred that the defect in defendant's ways, works, machinery, or plant arose from, or has not been discovered or remedied owing to defendant's negligence or the negligence of some person in the service of defendant and intrusted by defendant with the duty of seeing that such ways, etc., were in proper condition. But it is not necessary to allege the name of the person intrusted with the duty. Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Shea, 142 Ala. 119, 37 So. 796. See also and compare Sloss-Sheffield Steel, etc., Co. v. Mobley, 139 Ala. 425, 36 So. 181; Southern Car, etc., Co. v. Jennings, 137 Ala. 247, 34 So. 1002; *Houston Biscuit Co. v. In an action under the Illinois act of 1857, "for injuries done to persons by sea craft," it is sufficient to allege that the injuries to plaintiff, a seaman, were the result of the owner's negligence. The Norway v. Jensen, 52 Ill. 373.

Employment of minor.—A count charging that plaintiff was under fourteen years old, and that defendant had notice of that fact, and wrongfully and unlawfully employed him to work in a mine, sufficiently shows a wilful violation of Hurd Rev. St. Ill. (1899) c. 93, giving a right of action to the person injured by a wilful violation thereof. Mar-

(7) NEGLIGENT FAILURE TO WARN OR INSTRUCT SERVANT. In an action by a servant to recover for injuries alleged to have been caused by reason of the master's failure to warn or instruct him, the declaration or complaint must allege facts which show the duty to warn or instruct; the master's knowledge and the servant's ignorance of the danger; the negligent failure to warn or instruct; and a causal connection between such failure and the injury complained of.⁷⁸

(8) NEGLIGENCE IN THE EMPLOYMENT OR RETENTION OF SERVANTS. In an action against a master for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, based on the theory of the negligence of the master in selecting or retaining in his service an incompetent servant, the declaration or complaint should allege that the servant was incompetent, that the master negligently employed or retained him with knowledge, actual or constructive, of his incompetency, that plaintiff was ignorant thereof, and that the injury was caused by the negligence of such servant.⁷⁹ But an allegation that the act of employing a servant was done

78. Alabama.—Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Hulsey, 132 Ala. 444, 31 So. 527, holding that where the facts alleged show a duty on the part of the foreman to warn plaintiff and that plaintiff's injuries resulted from a failure to perform such duty, it is unnecessary specifically to aver the existence of such duty, and the negligent failure to discharge it. See also Alabama Mineral R. Co. v. Marcus, 128 Ala. 355, 30 So. 679.

Illinois.—Wabash R. Co. v. Bhymer, 214 Ill. 579, 73 N. E. 879 [reversing 112 Ill. App. 225].

Indiana.—Peterson v. New Pittsburgh Coal, etc., Co., 149 Ind. 260, 49 N. E. 8, 63 Am. St. Rep. 289 (allegation insufficient in not averring that defendant, or the superintendent or foreman, knew, or had reason to know, of plaintiff's ignorance of the dangers); Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Young, 117 Ind. 520, 20 N. E. 423 (complaint for injuries to minor must allege either that he was too young for the service he was required to perform, or that he had no knowledge of the danger, or that the master, knowing his age and inexperience, neglected to give him necessary warning and instruction); Danley v. Scanlon, 116 Ind. 8, 17 N. E. 158 (complaint for injury to minor held sufficiently specific); Indiana Mfg. Co. v. Wells, 31 Ind. App. 460, 68 N. E. 319 (avermnt of failure to instruct servant indispensable); Peerless Stone Co. v. Wray, 10 Ind. App. 324, 37 N. E. 1058 (causal connection must be shown between master's failure to warn and the injury received); Becker v. Baumgartner, 5 Ind. App. 576, 32 N. E. 786 (facts must show want of knowledge of danger by servant).

Tennessee.—Whitelaw v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 16 Lea 391, 1 S. W. 37, holding good a declaration which averred that plaintiff, a youth of about nineteen years of age, had never in fact been employed in the particular work in the doing of which the injury was incurred, and was ignorant of the proper tools to perform the work with safety, was not instructed by defendant as to the danger of the work, not furnished with proper tools to do the work.

Texas.—Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Harrington,

62 Tex. 597 (avermnt showing that failure of duty was chargeable to defendant necessarily); Hillsboro Oil Co. v. White, (Civ. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 432 (petition held sufficient); White v. San Antonio Waterworks Co., 9 Tex. Civ. App. 465, 29 S. W. 252 (complaint for injuries to minor held sufficient); Campbell v. Walker, (Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 823 (complaint held good on general demurrer); Bonner v. Moore, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 416, 22 S. W. 272 (facts held sufficient to show duty).

West Virginia.—Trump v. Tidewater Coal, etc., Co., 46 W. Va. 238, 32 S. E. 1035, holding that the fact that a complaint failed to allege that a minor servant did not possess the necessary experience and skill to appreciate and guard against the increased danger in the work to which he was assigned does not make it demurrable where it was alleged that after he was directed to do more dangerous work defendant "wrongfully and negligently" failed to instruct and direct plaintiff in the discharge of said duty.

United States.—O'Connor v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 137 Fed. 503, 70 C. C. A. 87 (in which the declaration failed to allege that defendant knew, or should have known, that deceased was inexperienced, of immature judgment, or ignorant of the dangers attending the service); Fortin v. Manville Co., 128 Fed. 642 (holding that a mere allegation that it was defendant's duty to warn plaintiff, which had not been done, without an allegation of facts from which it appeared that the duty existed, was insufficient).

in a negligent manner, and that in consequence thereof an incompetent servant was taken into defendant's service, has been held a sufficient specification of negligence in employing an incompetent servant, without alleging that defendant knew, or could have known, of his incompetency.⁸⁰

(9) NEGLIGENT EMPLOYMENT OF INSUFFICIENT FORCE. Where the theory of an action by a servant to recover for personal injuries is that the master was negligent in failing to employ a sufficient number of men for the work, a general allegation that the master negligently failed to provide a sufficient force, in consequence of which the injury complained of was sustained, is sufficient.⁸¹

(iii) NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANTS—(A) In General. A declaration, petition, or complaint to recover for an injury to a servant caused by the negligence of the master need not affirmatively aver that the injury was not caused by the negligence of fellow servants;⁸² and where the negligence is charged directly against the master, although a corporation incapable of acting otherwise than through agents, it will not be assumed on demurrer that the act or omission was, in its nature, that of a fellow servant.⁸³ But where the negligent act or omission

—Where a servant alleges that he receives injuries through the negligence of the master and sets forth the acts of omission constituting the negligence, the fact that the petition shows that the negligence of a fellow servant was a contributory cause to the injury does not render it subject to demurrer. Young v. Shickle, etc., Iron Co., 103 Mo. 324, 15 S. W. 771. See also Kentucky, etc., Bridge Co. v. Hall, 125 Ind. 220, 25 N. Vermont.—See Henry v. Fitchburg R. Co., 65 Vt. 436, 26 Atl. 485, where it was held that an allegation that the injury occurred while plaintiff was "in the prudent and reasonable discharge of the duties of his employment" was a sufficient allegation of want of knowledge of a defect in appliances as against a general demurrer.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," §§ 844-846.

Where a right of action is given for the neglect of a statutory duty, it is not necessary to allege or show in the complaint that plaintiff was ignorant of defendant's negligent failure to perform the duties imposed by the statute, or that he did not assume the risks resulting in his injury. D. H. Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 158 Ind. 607, 62 N. E. 492.

A general allegation of want of knowledge covers both actual and imputed knowledge, and will be sufficient, on demurrer, unless negated by the specific facts stated. Pennsylvania Co. v. Witte, 15 Ind. App. 583, 43 N. E. 319, 44 N. E. 377. See also Robinson v. Etter, 30 Ind. App. 253, 63 N. E. 767; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wagner, 17 Ind. App. 22, 45 N. Where the defect was not so open and obvious that as a matter of law plaintiff was chargeable with knowledge thereof and the danger therefrom, a demurrer to a complaint alleging that plaintiff had no knowledge of the defect admits the truth of such allegation. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Parish, 28 Ind. App. 189, 62 N. E. 514.

An allegation that plaintiff did not have reason to anticipate or provide against the injuries is sufficient, as against an objection, made on demurrer, that the complaint showed that plaintiff assumed the risk of injury. Walsh v. Western R. Co., 34 Fla. 1, 15 So. 686.

An allegation of want of knowledge is unavailing where the facts alleged show knowledge. Indiana, etc., Coal Co. v. Batey, 34 Ind. App. 16, 71 N. E. 191.

An allegation of freedom from fault or negligence does not take the place of averments that the risk was not knowingly assumed by plaintiff as an incident to his service. Indianapolis, etc., Rapid Transit Co. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 69 N. E. 669, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185.

The court will not assume knowledge where the petition alleges ignorance of the defects. Bedford Belt R. Co. v. Brown, 142 Ind. 659, 42 N. E. 359.

Defects in construction.—Where the injury resulted from agencies dangerous through defects in construction, and not through want of repair or decay, the complaint need not show that the servant's opportunities to discover the danger were not equal to those of the master. Salem Stone, etc., Co. v. Griffin, 139 Ind. 141, 38 N. E. 411. See also Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Doan, 3 Ind. App. 453, 29 N. E. 940.

California.—Magee v. North Pac. Coast R. Co., 78 Cal. 430, 21 Pac. 114, 12 Am. St. Rep. 69.

Georgia.—Preston v. Central R., etc., Co., 84 Ga. 588, 11 S. E. 143, holding that the contention that plaintiff could have known of the defects by the use of ordinary care and diligence is a matter of defense. Compare Dozier v. Atlanta, 118 Ga. 354, 45 S. E. 306, holding that where the allegations of the petition show that plaintiff's injuries were occasioned by his having assumed the risk ordinarily incident to the work in which he was employed, and it does not appear that he could not have seen and avoided the danger, a demurrer is properly sustained.

Minnesota.—Rolseth v. Smith, 38 Minn. 14, 35 N. W. 565, 8 Am. St. Rep. 637, to the effect that the court cannot say as a matter of law that it appears from the allegations of the complaint that plaintiff assumed the risk, unless they so clearly show the fact that there could be no room for different minds reasonably arriving at different conclusions upon any possible evidence admissible under and consistent with the allegations.

had knowledge of the defect or danger which caused his injuries, but based his right of recovery on a promise by the master to remedy the defect or remove the danger, he should allege notice or complaint to the master, the promise of remedy, his reliance on the promise, and the lapse of a reasonable time for repairing after the promise was made.⁹² But on the other hand, if the complaint shows that an unreasonable time had elapsed between the promise and the injury, the servant will be held to have waived the promise and assumed the risk,⁹³ although this, being a matter of defense, need not be negatived.⁹⁴

(c) Inexperienced or Youthful Servants. Assumption of risk is sufficiently negatived where it is alleged that the servant was inexperienced or youthful, that he did not know or appreciate the dangers to which he was exposed, and that the master, knowing these facts, failed to warn or instruct him as to the dangers of his employment.⁹⁵

(v) *NEGATIVE CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE*⁹⁶—(A) In General. As in the case of assumption of risk, contributory negligence is regarded in some jurisdictions as an affirmative defense, which must be alleged and proved by defendant, and consequently need not be negatived by plaintiff;⁹⁷ while in others it is held that the absence of contributory negligence is essential to the servant's

92. Illinois.—St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Bokamp, 181 Ill. 9, 54 N. E. 567 [affirming 75 Ill. App. 605], where, however, the complaint was held sufficient after verdict, although it failed to allege reliance on the promise, or that a reasonable time for repair had elapsed.

Indiana.—Daugherty v. Midland Steel Co., 23 Ind. App. 78, 53 N. E. 844 (reliance on promise must be pleaded); Romona Oolitic Stone Co. v. Phillips, 11 Ind. App. 118, 39 N. E. 96 (allegations held sufficient).

Kentucky.—McDowell v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1887) 5 S. W. 413, holding that, in the absence of an averment that defendant had failed to repair within a reasonable time, the court cannot adjudge that a delay of three days constituted negligence.

Rhode Island.—Whalan v. Whipple, (1887) 13 Atl. 107, allegation of lapse of reasonable time necessary.

United States.—Kidwell v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,757, 3 Woods 313, notice to master or vice-principal must be shown.

Averment of failure to fulfil promise unnecessary see McDowell v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 8 S. W. 871, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 209.

93. A complaint fails to show that the servant was injured within a reasonable period for the performance of the master's promise, and shows no cause of action, where it alleges that the master had ample time and opportunity, and was able to repair the defect, between the time of the promise and that of the injury, but neglected to do so. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," §§ 840-851, 853.

An allegation of due care is not a mere inference or conclusion of law, and is sufficient when accompanied by a statement of the particular work the servant was engaged in when injured; but is insufficient when accompanied merely by a general statement that he was employed to assist in the work of carrying on defendant's business. Di Marcho v. Builders' Iron Foundry, 18 R. I. 514, 27 Atl. 328, 28 Atl. 661.

The phrase "without fault" sufficiently negatives contributory negligence. Rogers v. Overton, 87 Ind. 410. See also Buehner Chair Co. v. Feulner, 28 Ind. App. 479, 63 N. E. 239; Pennsylvania Co. v. Burgett, 7 Ind. App. 333, 33 N. E. 914, 34 N. E. 605; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Berry, 2 Ind. App. 427, 28 N. E. 714.

That plaintiff "was in the usual and ordinary course of his employment" amounts to a statement that he was in the exercise of ordinary care. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Conway, 67 Ill. App. 155.

An allegation of freedom from fault, without an allegation of want of knowledge, is in-bad,⁹⁹ even though there is a specific allegation that plaintiff was in the exercise of due care or that he had no knowledge of the defect or danger.¹ But, on the other hand, although the pleading states facts from which it might be inferred that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, yet, when such an inference does not necessarily follow from the averments of the declaration, petition, or complaint, taken as a whole, an allegation directly negating such negligence renders it good as against a general demurrer.²

A general allegation of want of knowledge includes constructive as well as actual notice, and it is not necessary to allege further that plaintiff could not have obtained knowledge by due diligence. *Denver, etc., R. (B) Statutory Liability. Where an action for personal injuries is brought by a servant against his master under the provisions of a statute imposing liability upon the master, contributory negligence need not be negated in the declaration or complaint.³

b. Plea or Answer⁴—(i) IN GENERAL. The plea or answer in an action by a servant to recover from his master for personal injuries is governed, as to form and sufficiency, by the general rules of pleading applicable in similar actions.⁵

(ii) ALLEGING NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANTS. Unless the declaration or complaint is demurrable because it shows on its face that plaintiff was injured by the negligence of a fellow servant,⁶ the defense that the injury was caused by such negligence must be set up, in some jurisdictions, by plea or answer.⁷ In many jurisdictions, however, defendant may show that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, without pleading the fact specially.⁸

(iii) *ALLEGING ASSUMPTION OF RISK.*⁹ In those jurisdictions in which assumption of risk is required to be negated by plaintiff, it is not necessary for defendant to allege that the risk on account of which the injury occurred was an assumed one;¹⁰ but in others it is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded by

c. Replication or Reply. As against a plea that the accident was occasioned by the servant's violation of a rule which forbade getting between cars, while in motion, to uncouple them, it is proper matter for replication that the rule could not be observed, consistently with the duties imposed on and required of brakemen by defendant.¹⁸

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," §§ 863, 865, 866.

A general allegation of negligence and carelessness is sufficient to support the admission of evidence of any fact contributing proximately to the injury. Uren v. Golden Tunnel Min. Co., 24 Wash. 261, 64 Pac. 174.

Evidence of wilful negligence is admissible under a general allegation of negligence. Shumacher v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 39 Fed. 174.

Defendant's knowledge is an ingredient of negligence, and may be proved under the general allegation of negligence. Knaresborough v. Belcher Silver Min. Co., 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,874, 3 Sawy. 446.

An averment that defendant had actual knowledge of a dangerous condition does not preclude proof that he was negligent in failing to exercise ordinary care to know such condition. Blazenic v. Iowa, etc., Coal Co., 102 Iowa 706, 72 N. W. 292.

Evidence of other acts of negligence than the one alleged may be admitted to show the circumstances attending the transaction resulting in the injury; but such evidence will not justify a recovery, unless the specific act of negligence is established. Palmer Brick Co. v. Chenall, 119 Ga. 837, 47 S. E. 329.

An allegation that a machine was defective and without proper guards is broad enough

(2) UNDER GENERAL ISSUE OR GENERAL DENIAL.²⁸ Under the general issue or general denial any defense is available which is not required to be specially pleaded.²⁹

(3) UNDER ALLEGATIONS AS TO INCOMPETENCY OF FELLOW SERVANTS. In order to warrant the admission of evidence that the fellow servant through whose negligence plaintiff was injured was incompetent, the declaration or complaint must allege his incompetency.³⁰ But an allegation of gross negligence involves the competency of the fellow servant, and renders admissible evidence as to his experience;³¹ and generally any facts are admissible in evidence, under an allegation of incompetency or lack of skill, which tend to establish or disprove the allegation.³² to warrant the admission of evidence tending to establish any defect in the machine which rendered it dangerous to the operator. Valentine v. A. Colburn Co., 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 453.

Under an allegation that defendant furnished unsafe tools it is permissible to show what were the proper and ordinary implements for the work in which the servant was engaged. Anderson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 109 Iowa 524, 80 N. W. 561.

Rules and usages of a railroad company as to the manner of the performance of a duty need not be pleaded, in order to authorize their introduction in evidence. Henry v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 52, 23 N. W. 260.

Evidence showing an order and custom to block frogs, although not pleaded, is admissible, in an action for injuries caused by leaving a frog unblocked, as showing that the railroad conceded that unblocked frogs were dangerous. Coates v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 62 Iowa 486, 17 N. W. 760.

In an action for injuries resulting from the negligence or incompetency of a vice-principal, it need not be alleged that such person was vice-principal, or that his incompetency was known to the principal, to let in proof that the injury occurred by the negligence or incompetency of such vice-principal. Harris v. Balfour Quarry Co., 137 N. C. 204, 49 S. E. 95.

Evidence admitted as part of res gestæ see Kucera v. Merrill Lumber Co., 91 Wis. 637, 65 N. W. 374.

28. As to pleading assumption of risk see supra, IV, H, 2, b, (III).

As to pleading contributory negligence see supra, IV, H, 2, b, (IV).

As to pleading fellow service see supra, IV, H, 2, b, (II).

Consumers' Oil Co.*, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 90 S. W. 717; Baxter v. New York, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 1002.

Under Iowa Code (1873), § 2704, limiting evidence under a denial to such as negatives some fact bound to be proved by the other party, a custom among bricklayers with reference to the building of scaffolds is unavailable; in an action by a bricklayer against his master for injuries sustained through the falling of a scaffold, unless pleaded. Eller v. Loomis, 106 Iowa 276, 76 N. W. 686.

30. Greeley v. Foster, 32 Colo. 292, 75 Pac. 351.

31. Wood v. Heiges, 83 Md. 257, 34 Atl. 872.

32. Massachusetts.—McGuerty v. Hale, 161 Mass. 51, 36 N. E. 682 (holding that evidence of the competency of the foreman is admissible under an allegation that defendant did not furnish competent servants); Robinson v. Fitchburg, etc., R. Co., 7 Gray 92 (under an allegation that a servant was employed at low wages because of his want of skill, defendant may prove by its president that he employed him as a competent and safe engineer).

New York.—Probst v. Delamater, 100 N. Y. 266, 3 N. E. 184 (evidence of intoxication admissible on issue of competency); Lyons v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 39 Hun 385 (plaintiff may show intemperate habits of servant).

Texas.—Branch v. International, etc., R. Co., (Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 208, evidence of prior violation of rules, disobedience, and untrustworthiness admissible.

Utah.—Stoll v. Daly Min. Co., 19 Utah 271, 57 Pac. 295, holding that evidence that an engineer was careless to such an extent as to increase the risks and hazards of the employment is proper, under an allegation of his incompetency.

Virginia.—Lane v. Bauserman, 103 Va. 146, 48 S. E. 857, 106 Am. St. Rep. 872 (holding that under an allegation of incapacity and want of skill, defendant's superintendent may be asked, "Did you assign to the steel gang any but experienced men?"); Dingee v. Unrue, 98 Va. 247, 35 S. E. 794.

Washington.—Green v. Western American Co., 30 Wash. 87, 70 Pac. 310, holding that evidence of specific acts of incompetency of a pit boss, and that he did not have regard for the lives of the men under his charge, is admissible under a general allegation that he was ignorant and incompetent.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 867.

Failure to keep a competent engineer is in issue under a declaration which details all the facts, showing that at the time of the accident the engine was being managed by the fireman. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Thomas, 90 Va. 205, 17 S. E. 884, 44 Am. St. Rep.

(4) UNDER ALLEGATIONS AS TO CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. On an issue of contributory negligence defendant may introduce evidence of any facts tending to establish his defense,³³ and plaintiff may avail himself of any facts which tend to disprove such negligence,³⁴ even though not alleged in his declaration or complaint.³⁵ But a plea of contributory negligence is not sufficient to let in the defense that the injury was caused by the negligence of fellow servants,³⁶ and where defendant alleges a specific act of contributory negligence, he cannot rely on any other act of negligence.³⁷ Since a plea of contributory negligence filed with a general denial admits that there is an issue of negligence between the parties, defendant cannot show that plaintiff was employed by a third person who is the proper party to be sued.³⁸

(ii) VARIANCE. A material variance between the allegations and the proof in an action by a servant against his master for personal injuries is fatal.³⁹ An

906. Compare Harper v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 44 Mo. 488, holding that an allegation that it was the duty of defendants to employ a suitable engineer, and that they neglected to do so, does not authorize proof that a fireman, in the absence of the engineer, managed the locomotive, unless it is also alleged that defendants authorized or allowed him to do so.

Evidence of general reputation is not admissible in an action founded on negligence, and not on incompetency. Malcolm v. Fuller, 152 Mass. 160, 25 N. E. 83.

Evidence of subsequent discharge of a servant for want of skill and care is not admissible where the action is founded on negligence, not on incompetency. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Collins, 85 Tenn. 227, 1 S. W. 883.

Evidence of intoxication is incompetent if the pleadings do not raise the issue. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McNeill, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 647. Compare Probst v. Delamater, 100 N. Y. 266, 3 N. E. 184.

Under an allegation that an engineer was incompetent, and that one of the brakes on the train was defective, evidence is not admissible that the road-bed was in bad condition. Ransier v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 30 Minn. 215, 14 N. W. 883.

33. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Davis, 119 Ala. 572, 24 So. 862 (holding that under a general plea of contributory negligence any defense of negligence is authorized which defendant's evidence may establish as legally contributory); Alcorn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 108 Mo. 81, 18 S. W. 188; Marshall v. Charleston, etc., R. Co., 57 S. C. 138, 35 S. E. 497; Bell v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 81 S. W. 134. But see Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Magrill, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 353, 40 S. W. 188, holding that an allegation of contributory negligence in general terms will not admit of a defense of disobedience of orders.

Admissibility of rules.—Defendant may introduce its rules, for the purpose of showing contributory negligence, without alleging that plaintiff had violated a rule. Alcorn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 108 Mo. 81, 18 S. W. 188. Contra, Strong v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 94 Iowa 380, 62 N. W. 799.

leads the opposite party to his prejudice,⁴¹ while in Indiana no judgment will be reversed for anything which might have been amended below.⁴²

3. EVIDENCE⁴³ — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — (1) PRESUMPTIONS — (A) As to Existence of Relation of Master and Servant. The fact that one is found doing service for another is prima facie evidence of an employment;⁴⁴ and where plaintiff proves that he was employed by defendant several years prior to the accident, it will be presumed that the contractual relation existed at the time of the injury.⁴⁵

(B) As to Existence of Remedy. Where plaintiff brings suit to recover for injuries received in another jurisdiction, while it will be presumed that there is a law in force in such jurisdiction furnishing a remedy for the injury,⁴⁶ it will also be presumed that the fellow servant doctrine obtains therein.⁴⁷

(C) As to Negligence of Master — (1) IN GENERAL. In an action by a servant against his master for personal injuries there is a prima facie presumption that the master was free from negligence.⁴⁸

(2) CAUSE OF INJURY. Where the evidence leaves the cause of an injury unproved, it cannot be attributed to defendant's negligence.⁴⁹ But where there was a failure of one or the other of two appliances, and one of them was known to be defective, there is ground for the jury to draw an inference that it was probably the defective appliance that failed, and caused the accident;⁵⁰ and where it is shown that the servant was injured while the master was acting in violation of a statute, the damages will be attributed to negligence, in the absence of anything to show the contrary.⁵¹

(3) CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS IMPOSING LIABILITY. Under constitutional and statutory provisions in force in some of the United States negligence on the part of the master may be presumed.⁵²

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," §§ 870-876.

Where the declaration merely alleges the exercise of due care by plaintiff, it is not a variance between pleading and evidence to show that defendant promised to repair and did not do so, and that, relying on such promise, plaintiff continued in defendant's employ and was injured. *Sattley Mfg. Where two railroads use a yard indiscriminately, and there is no evidence as to the nature of the contract between the roads, except that several employees in the yard testify that they are paid by the other company, but that a short time before they were paid by defendant, every presumption will be indulged against defendant, since it could easily show the contract between the parties. Missouri

(4) EXISTENCE OF DEFECT OR HAPPENING OF ACCIDENT OR INJURY.⁵³ No presumption of negligence on the part of the master arises from the mere existence of a defect or the happening of the accident through which the servant was injured.⁵⁴ The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" is applicable only where the matter of the occurrence or the attendant circumstances are such that the jury can reasonably infer that the occurrence would not have taken place unless the master was lacking in diligence, and where there is the slightest evidence to explain the happening of the occurrence on any other theory than that of the negligence claimed, the jury should disregard the inference arising from the fact of the injury.⁵⁵

the negligence of a fellow servant, the presumption that defendant's servant was negligent arises on proof that plaintiff was free from fault. Florida Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Mooney, 40 Fla. 17, 24 So. 148.

(5) AS TO TOOLS, MACHINERY, APPLIANCES, AND PLACES FOR WORK. of any defects therein.⁵⁷ But it will not be presumed that a railroad company inspected a particular car for defects by which an employee was injured, on a showing that it was the custom to inspect all cars.⁵⁸

(6) AS TO METHODS OF WORK, RULES, AND ORDERS. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the methods of work adopted by a master, and the rules and regulations promulgated by him for the government of his employees, are proper and sufficient;⁵⁹ and where the existence of a rule is shown it will be further presumed that it was known to an employee at the time of his injury.⁶⁰ Where a servant fails to obey positive orders as to the manner of doing his work, it is prima facie evidence of his negligence.⁶¹

(7) AS TO SELECTION AND RETENTION OF SERVANTS. While a master is presumed to have known in regard to the incompetency of a fellow servant what was generally known to those among whom such servant worked and lived, and what he might have known by the exercise of due care and diligence,⁶² he will be presumed, in the absence of affirmative proof to the contrary, to have exercised proper care in the selection and retention of his servants.⁶³

(D) As to Assumption of Risk. A servant is presumed to have assumed the risks ordinarily incident to his employment,⁶⁴ and those arising from defects or dangers of which he has, or ought to have, knowledge.⁶⁵ But knowledge of defects and dangers is in some jurisdictions matter of defense, and no presumption of knowledge arises, in the absence of evidence that the servant did have knowledge;⁶⁶ nor is he presumed to have assumed the risk of special dangers, arising from a peculiar condition of affairs.⁶⁷ Where a servant continues to work because of a promise by the employer to repair a defect, there is no presumption that he assumes the risk incidental to the defect,⁶⁸ unless the time for the performance of the promise has gone by, and he knows that the repairs have not been made.⁶⁹

(II) *BURDEN OF PROOF*⁷³—(A) In General. As in other actions, so in an action by a servant to recover from the master for personal injuries, the burden is upon plaintiff to establish his cause of action by a preponderance of evidence, and upon defendant to establish an affirmative defense.⁷⁴

(B) Negligence of Master. In an action for personal injuries it is essential that the servant should prove by a preponderance of the evidence not only that other attended with danger, the adoption of the latter raises a presumption of negligence.

Coulton*, 86 Ala. 129, 5 So. 458, holding that the burden is not on plaintiff to prove that defendant knew of the imperfection of brakes on a train, whose defects, he alleges, caused the accident.

Plaintiff need not show precise nature of defect.—Nelson v. St. Paul Plow Works, 57 Minn. 43, 58 N. W. 868.

On a hearing in damages the burden is on defendant to prove that the injury was not caused by his negligence, and that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Julian v. Stony Creek Red Granite Co., 71 Conn. 632, 42 Atl. 994.

Care of inexperienced or youthful servant.—The mother of an infant cannot recover for injuries received by her child while running a machine which was safe when properly operated, in the absence of evidence that the master failed to give warning of the dangers injuries;⁷⁶ and this obligation is not discharged by merely showing the existence of a defect or the happening of the accident or injury.⁷⁷

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 897.

Where a master's negligence concurs with that of a fellow servant in producing an injury, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that the master's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 56 Fed. 988, 6 C. C. A. 205.

Plaintiff need not point out the particular act or omission which caused the accident, but is only required to furnish evidence from which defendant's negligence may be inferred. *Mooney v. Shifting of burden.—Where defendant admitted in its answer that the injury was caused by the unsafe condition of its track, the burden shifted to it to establish its contention that the accident was caused by the malicious act of a trespasser, for whom it was not responsible, and that the consequences of such act could not have been prevented by the exercise of reasonable care. Marcom v. Raleigh, etc., R. Co., 126 N. C. 200, 35 S. E. 423.

Where defendant admits knowledge of its tracks being unsafe at the point where an employee was injured by the derailment of a hand-car, it will be presumed that its negligence in failing to maintain a safe track was the cause of the injury, and the burden is cast on it to show that the accident was not caused by its negligence. Wilkie v. Raleigh, etc., R. Co., 127 N. C. 203, 37 S. E. 204.

Where deceased was run over twice, it is not necessary to show whether he was killed by the first or second running-over. Brooke v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 81 Iowa 504, 47 N. W. 74.

Where a train ran into an open switch, and a car was overturned, killing a brakeman, and there was evidence tending to show that the track at that point was in a defective condition, the burden was on defendant to show that the defects had no effect in overturning the car. *International, etc., R. (c) Incompetency or Negligence of Fellow Servants. In an action by a servant against his master for injuries caused by the negligence of an incompetent servant, plaintiff has the burden of proving the fact of incompetency,⁷⁸ and that the master was negligent in selecting such servant, or in retaining him in the service after actual or constructive notice of his incompetency.⁷⁹ But the burden of establishing the relation of fellow servants between plaintiff and the servant whose negligence caused the injury, so as to relieve defendant from liability, is upon him;⁸⁰ and the courts of one state will not presume that the fellow servant rule exists in another state, so as to throw on a plaintiff who has been injured by the negligence of a fellow servant in such other state the burden of proving that the rule has been abrogated by statute.⁸¹

(D) Assumption of Risk.⁸² In a number of jurisdictions the burden of showing assumption of risk is on defendant,⁸³ while in others the burden is on plaintiff to show that he did not assume the risk.⁸⁴ Where a servant has continued in the service notwithstanding knowledge of a defect or danger, the burden is upon him to prove a promise by the master to repair the defect or remove the danger.⁸⁵

(E) Contributory Negligence. In some jurisdictions the rule seems to be well settled that the burden is on plaintiff to show by a preponderance of evidence that he was free from contributory negligence,⁸⁶ while, on the other hand, in Georgia.—The rule as to the burden of proof is as follows: "After proving the fact and degree of the injury, if the plaintiff will show himself not to blame, the law then presumes, until the contrary appears, that the others — and these include a majority of the United States — contributory negligence is regarded as an affirmative defense which must be proved by defendant,⁸⁷

company was to blame; or if he will show, on the other hand, that the company was to blame, the law then presumes, until the contrary appears, that he was not to blame. So that, in order to make a prima facie case, and change the onus, he need not go further than to show by evidence one or the other of these two propositions: either that he was not to blame, or that the company was. The company, taking at this stage the burden of reply, can defend successfully by disproving either proposition." *Central R., etc., Co. v. 89. Alabama.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 91 Ala. 487, 8 So. 552 (under Code, § 2590, subd. 1, a servant injured by a defective appliance had the burden of proving that the defect complained of arose, or had not been discovered and remedied, owing to the master's negligence, or that of his servant charged with such duty); Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Holborn, 84 Ala. 133, 4 So. 146 (Act Feb. 28, 1887, does not apply where an employee has been injured while engaged in his regular duty).

Delaware.—Under 31 U. S. St. at L. 1446 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3176], the burden is on plaintiff to show that the cars in question were being used in moving interstate commerce, and were not properly equipped. Winkler v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 4 Pennw. 80, 53 Atl. 90.

Georgia.—See Western, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson, 113 Ga. 355, 38 S. E. 820; Augusta Southern R. Co. v. McDade, 105 Ga. 134, 31 S. E. 420; Robinson v. Huidekoper, 98 Ga. 306, 25 S. Co., 53 Ga. 488, construing Code, §§ 3033, 3034, 3036.

Illinois.—Where a person is injured by reason of a wilful failure of a mine proprietor to comply with the provisions of the act providing for the health and safety of persons employed in coal mines, it is not necessary for him to show that he was in the exercise of ordinary care, as in cases of personal injuries arising from negligence. Carterville Coal Co. v. Abbott, 81 Ill. App. 279.

Kentucky.—Under St. § 2731, a miner who shows that he was injured by an explosion, and that the master had not complied with the statute, makes a prima facie case, and throws on defendant the burden of showing contributory negligence. Godfrey v. Beattyville Coal Co., 101 Ky. 339, 41 S. W. 10, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 501.

Massachusetts.—Where the Employers' Liability Act does not otherwise provide, plaintiff must show due care in an action under the statute (Shea v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 154 Mass. 31, 27 N. E. 672; Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co., 143 Mass. 470, 10 N. E. 308), but he need not prove his ignorance of any danger, or the giving of information thereof to his employer (Connolly v. Waltham, 156 Mass. 368, 31 N. E. 302).

Minnesota.—Gen. Laws (1887), c. 13, does not change the rule that the burden of proving contributory negligence is on defendant (Lorimer v. St. Paul City R. Co., 48 Minn. 391, 51 N. W. 125), but under 5 U. S. St. at L. p. 306, § 13, a steamboat owner, sued for injuries caused by the explosion of a boiler, must disprove negligence on his part (McMahon v. Davidson, 12 Minn. 357).

Mississippi.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cathey, 70 Miss. 332, 12 So. 253 (prior to the constitution of 1890, the burden was on plaintiff, in an action against a railroad, to show negligence on the part of defendant, and that such negligence was the direct cause of the injury); Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 693, 2 So. 537 (fact that an injury resulted from the precedent wrong of the person injured will not prevent the application of Rev. Code (1880), § 1059).

New York.—Under Laws (1902), p. 1748, c. 600, plaintiff must show absence of contributory negligence. Hoehn v. Lautz, 94 N. Y. App. Div. 14, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 921; McHugh v. Manhattan R. Co., 88 N. Y. App. Div. 554, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 184.

b. Admissibility⁹⁰—(1) IN GENERAL. Subject to the general rules of evidence, especially with regard to its competency, relevancy, and materiality,⁹¹ and Ohio.—Under Rev. St. § 3365, the burden is thrown on the railroad company to show that it has used due diligence, and is not guilty of negligence. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Stone, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 192. See also Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Burris, 111 Fed. 882, 50 C. C. 48.

South Carolina.—Under Rev. St. § 1582, plaintiff must prove freedom from contributory negligence. Barksdale v. Laurens, 58 S. C. 413, 36 S. E. 661.

Wisconsin.—Rev. St. (1898) § 1816, subd. 1, does not, in an action for injuries caused by the derailment of a train owing to a wash-out, relieve plaintiff from the burden of showing that the wash-out was caused by the defective construction of the track, nor showing that it had existed so long that the company was negligent in not knowing of it, nor of showing that an employee was negligent in not inspecting the road between the time of the wash-out and the happening of the accident (Crouse v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 102 Wis. 196, 78 N. W. 446, 778); and generally plaintiff must show that the injury was caused by the negligence of some "other agent or servant" of the railroad company (Ballou v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 54 Wis. 257, 11 N. W. 559, 41 Am. Rep. 31). But under Laws (1889), c. 438, the burden of disproving contributory negligence is not put on plaintiff, Dugan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 85 Wis. 609, 55 N. W. 894.

Canada.—An employer who fails to protect with railings machinery used by an employee has the burden of proving that an accident causing the latter's death would have occurred even if the machinery had been properly protected. Montreal Rolling Mills Co. v. Corcoran, 8 Quebec Q. B. 488.

⁹⁴ Georgia.—Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Strauss, 110 Ga. 189, 35 S. E. 332, holding that it is error to reject evidence tending to between defendant and the person for whose negligence it is sought to hold him liable.⁹⁵

(iii) *NEGLIGENCE ON PART OF MASTER*⁹⁶—(A) *Care of Inexperienced or Youthful Servant.*⁹⁷ In an action to recover for injuries to an inexperienced or youthful servant, any evidence is admissible which tends to show or disprove the servant's inexperience or youth, the master's knowledge, actual or constructive, of the fact, and his failure to exercise due care for the servant's protection.⁹⁸ show hiring by another with same name as defendant's.

Illinois.—Pioneer Fireproof Constr. Co. v. Howell, 189 Ill. 123, 59 N. E. 535 [affirming 90 Ill. App. 122] (holding that in an action against a contractor and subcontractor for an injury to an employee of the latter, the contracts and specifications between the owner and contractor, and between the latter and his subcontractor, are admissible to show the relation of defendants to one another); Consolidated Coal Co. v. Seniger, 179 Ill. 370, 53 N. E. 733 [affirming 79 Ill. App. 456] (statement of defendant's superintendent as tending to show relation between the parties).

Kansas.—Brower v. Timreck, 66 Kan. 770, 71 Pac. 581 (evidence that defendant insured against accidents to employees, and that the insurance company employed the lawyers and was defending the action); Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Muncie, 56 Kan. 210, 42 Pac. 710 (evidence of previous suit by plaintiff against another for the same injury).

South Carolina.—Powers v. Standard Oil Co., 53 S. C. 358, 31 S. E. 276, holding that the fact that the cards, bill heads, etc., used in the business in which plaintiff was employed, were in defendant's name, is admissible.

Texas.—Dallas Electric Co. v. Mitchell, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 424, 76 S. W. 935 (holding that, where, in an action against two electric companies, the petition charged that defendants, at the time of the injury, had combined, evidence was admissible to show why one was furnishing power to the patrons of the other, and what the custom was about interchanging power); Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Reasor, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 302, 68 S. W. 332 (holding that, where in an action against a railroad for injuries sustained by plaintiff while acting as an express messenger, and also a baggageman, it was in issue whether plaintiff was employed by the railroad, it was proper to admit evidence that the express company deducted from the wages of plaintiff and of all other employees who acted in both capacities the sum of fifty cents per month as fees for defendant's hospital, which was not done where an employee acted only as messenger); Southern Pac. Co. v. Wellington, (Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 1114 (holding that, where defendant alleged that its lease of the road had expired at the time of the injury, it was error to reject a notice of the surrender of the lease, given before the accident, previous to that date. On the other road, tickets, lists of officers, agencies, and stations purporting to have been issued by defendant, together with the folders, and the words, marks, and sizes on bulletin boards, were all competent as tending to prove the existence of the relation at the time of the injury).

Wisconsin.—Kliegel v. Aitken, 94 Wis. 432, 69 N. W. 67, 59 Am. St. Rep. 901, 35 L. R. A. 249, in which proof of a hiring by an agent was admitted.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 910.

Evidence held inadmissible see Baker v. Lexington, etc., R. Co., 89 S. W. 149, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 140; Coleman v. Himmelberger-Harrison Land, etc., Co., 105 Mo. App. 254, 79 S. W. 981; San Antonio Waterworks Co. v. White, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 181.

Where a servant engages a substitute, and the latter is injured, evidence of private instructions, given by the foreman to the latter, as to how the work should be done, is admissible to bind the master. Mayfield v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 87 Ga. 374, 13 S. E. 459.

95. Relation between defendant and negligent servant.—The relation of master and servant between defendant and the person of whose negligence plaintiff complains is proved by the admission of defendant's representative, supplemented by other evidence to that effect, and by defendant's admission that such person was performing services for him at the time of the accident, although defendant denies the employment. Fechtman v. Huber, 10 N. Y. App. Div. 624, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 791.

97. Consent of parent to employment of child see PARENT AND CHILD.

98. Alabama.—Alabama Steel, etc., Co. v. Wrenn, 136 Ala. 475, 34 So. 970, where evidence that plaintiff's brother met defendant's superintendent, and asked him for work for plaintiff, and told him that plaintiff was inexperienced as far as public works were concerned, etc., was held competent, as showing plaintiff's inexperience, and the master's knowledge thereof.

Delaware.—Chielinsky v. Hoopes, etc., Co., 1 Marv. 273, 40 Atl. 1127, holding that it is permissible to show, in an action for injuries to a boy, that, although replacing a belt on a shaft was dangerous work, other boys did so, provided it took place in plaintiff's presence, and had entered into, either by permission or order, the work he was to do.

Illinois.—Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. Burke, 203 Ill. 250, 67 N. E. 818, holding that the question, "You knew, when you put him . . . to work, from your conversation with him and from what he did, that he had little or no experience in this line?" was not objectionable. Compare Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielie, 208 Ill. 116, 70 N. E. 17.

(B) *Conditions Preceding Injury.*⁹⁹ In an action by a servant for personal injuries evidence is admissible to show the condition of the master's machinery, appliances, or places for work previous to the injury, where such condition is shown, or may be presumed, to have continued up to the time of the accident;¹

Pennsylvania.—Reese v. Hershey, 163 Pa. St. 253, 29 Atl. 907, 43 Am. St. Rep. 795, holding that evidence that the same kind of machines were used without guards in another factory, where the boy had previously worked, was competent.

Texas.—Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Brick, 83 Tex. 598, 20 S. W. 511 (evidence that plaintiff, in fact nineteen years old, did not appear to be over sixteen, held admissible, as tending to show that defendant's agent knew him to be a minor); Gammel-Statesman Pub. Co. v. Monfort, (Civ. App. 1904) 81 S. W. 1029 (holding that, where an expert had testified that it was the custom for a man to serve two thirds of his apprenticeship before he could handle a machine of the character in question, he might properly testify further as to the term of service of an apprentice).

Utah.—Pence v. California Min. Co., 27 Utah 378, 75 Pac. 934, in which evidence as to what the usual custom was that prevailed in the mines in Utah and at defendant's mine in respect of having an experienced miner work with one whom the employer knows to be inexperienced was held admissible to show what precautions were generally taken in such cases, as bearing on the degree of care which defendant exercised for plaintiff's safety.

Virginia.—Virginia Iron, etc., Co. v. Tomlinson, (1905) 51 S. E. 362, holding that, in an action for the death of an infant servant, injured while working about certain machinery, evidence that children were permitted to go about the place where deceased was killed was admissible; but that evidence that children were permitted to go in other dangerous places was not competent to show that defendant had failed to instruct children as to the dangers attending their employment, or had given general permission for them to go into dangerous places.

Wisconsin.—Chopin v. Badger Paper Co., 83 Wis. 192, 53 N. W. 452, evidence held admissible to show the danger merely to which the boy was exposed, and the duty of warning him.

United States.—New York Biscuit Co. v. Rouss, 74 Fed. 608, 20 C. C. A. 555, holding that witness, familiar with the working of a machine, may describe its dangers, and what precautions were necessary to avoid them; may testify that the men usually employed upon it were of mature age, plaintiff being a young lad; and that before setting to work, such men were carefully instructed in the use of the machine.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 914.

Failure to warn servant.—Where the only theory on which plaintiff can recover is that he had not been warned of the dangers of his employment, and that he was too young and immature to understand such dangers, without due explanation and warning, it is not error to permit him to testify that no one had ever given him such explanation and warning. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Brick, 83 Tex. 598, 20 S. W. 511.

Negative evidence as to warning.—Where it is charged that the master had not warned the infant of danger, evidence of other employees that they had never heard the foreman give any instructions to any one as to the danger was not admissible. Virginia Iron, etc., Co. v. Tomlinson, (Va. 1905) 51 S. E. 362.

Evidence of experience or inexperience is immaterial where it is not shown that the servant was in the exercise of due care, and that the master was negligent. Kendrick v. Central R., etc., Co., 89 Ga. 782, 15 S. E. 685.

Prior injuries to children of plaintiff's age, while attempting to operate the same machine, are inadmissible in evidence. Cohen v. Hamblin, etc., Mfg. Co., 186 Mass. 544, 71 N. E. 948. See also Kolb v. Chicago Stamping Co., 33 Ill. App. 488. But see McCaragher v. Rogers, 8 N. Y. St. 847.

Average intelligence.—It is proper to exclude evidence as to whether plaintiff was "above or below the average intelligence of a boy of his age" (eighteen years and eight months), since it does not show that he was manifestly incapable of understanding the risk without instruction. Leistritz v. American Zylonite Co., 154 Mass. 382, 28 N. E. 294.

Evidence that it made a boy dizzy to work at the machine is inadmissible. Steiler v. Hart, 65 Mich. 644, 32 N. W. 875.

Defendant cannot show treatment of minor before the accident.—Wilt v. Vickers, 8 Watts (Pa.) 227.

and where one of the issues is the nature and sufficiency of repairs to a machine, made shortly before the accident, evidence as to defects in the machine prior to the making of the repairs is admissible.²

(c) Conditions After Injury. Where, in an action for personal injuries, the condition of machinery, appliances, or places for work, as they appeared within a reasonable time after the accident, warrants an inference as to the conditions existing at the time of the accident, such condition may be given in evidence.³

Reason of rule.—"But, on mature reflec-tion, we have concluded that evidence of this kind ought not to be admitted under any cir-cumstances, and that the rule heretofore adopted by this court is on principle wrong; not for the reason given by some courts, that the acts of the employees in making such re-pairs are not admissible against their prin-cipals, but upon the broader ground that such acts afford no legitimate basis for construing such an act as an admission of previous neglect of duty. A person may have exer-cised all the care which the law required, and yet, in the light of his new experience, after an unexpected accident has occurred, and as a measure of extreme caution, he may adopt additional safeguards. The more care-ful a person is, the more regard he has for the lives of others, the more likely he would be to do so, and it would seem unjust that he could not do so without being liable to have such acts construed as an admission of prior negligence. We think such a rule puts an unfair interpretation upon human conduct, and virtually holds out an inducement for although it may be admissible for other purposes, as for instance to rebut evidence of good condition after the accident.⁵

(E) Other Accidents or Acts of Negligence. As a general rule, in an action by a servant for personal injuries, other accidents or acts of negligence are inadmissible in evidence to show negligence on the part of defendant,⁶ unless shown to be closely connected with the accident complained of as to time, place, and circumstances.⁷ As to whether defendant can show that no similar accident has continued negligence." Morse v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 30 Minn. 465, 468, 16 N. E. 358 [quoted with approval in Nalley v. Hartford Carpet Co., 51 Conn. 524, 50 Am. Wisconsin.—Paine v. Eastern R. Co. of Minnesota, 91 Wis. 340, 64 N. W. 1005; Nadau v. White River Lumber Co., 76 Wis. 120, 43 N. W. 1135, 20 Am. St. Rep. 29.

United States.—Blumenthal v. Craig, 81 Fed. 320, 26 C. C. A. 427.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 920.

The cost of appliances is admissible in evidence to show that they were of good quality. Little v. Head, etc., Co., 69 N. H. 494, 43 Atl. 619.

Evidence that an engine had been in a head-end collision, and was very old, worn, and leaky, is admissible in an action for injuries caused by its explosion. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 109 Ill. App. 468 [affirmed in 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435].

Evidence of what constitutes a completed bridge is admissible in an action for injuries resulting from the use of a bridge in course of construction. Keatley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 94 Iowa 685, 63 N. W. 560.

Where the condition of the rails at the place of the accident is in question, it is not necessary to confine the evidence to the condition of the rails at the exact place where the injury was received. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kinnare, 76 Ill. App. 394.

Borrowed appliances.—In an action for injuries caused by the falling of a scaffold suspended from iron hooks, one of which broke, it was competent, as showing the care exercised in selecting them, to show that the owner from whom they were borrowed, and who had practical knowledge of their use, recommended them. Little v. Head, etc., Co., 69 N. H. 494, 43 Atl. 619.

For instances of evidence held admissible to show master's knowledge of defects or dangers see Birmingham Traction Co. v. Reville, 136 Ala. 335, 34 So. 981 (notice to agent); Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Pearson, 97

(2) CUSTOMARY APPLIANCES OR METHODS. A general custom¹² amongst others in the same business with regard to their appliances, machinery, places for work, or methods respecting them is admissible in evidence on the question of the master's exercise of due care in providing reasonably safe instrumentalities or places.¹³

Ala. 211, 12 So. 176 (evidence as to length of time defect existed); Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hall, 91 Ala. 112, 8 So. 371, 24 Am. St. Rep. 863 (evidence of general notoriety); Colorado City v. Liafe, 28 Colo. 468, 65 Pac. 630 (knowledge of street commissioner); Ashley Wire Co. v. Mercier, 163 Ill. 486, 45 N. E. 222 (notice to superintendent); Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Bailey, 145 Ill. 159, 33 N. E. 1089 [affirming 43 Ill. App. 292] (evidence that engine was regarded as dangerous by defendant's servants); Bates Mach. Co. v. Crowley, 115 Ill. App. 540 (conversation between an employee and foreman); Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Bundy, 152 Ind. 590, 53 N. E. 175 (notice to superintendent); Salem Stone, etc., Co. v. Griffin, 139 Ind. 141, 38 N. E. 411 (injury to another from same defects); Southern R. Co. v. Sittasen, (Ind. App. 1905) 74 N. E. 898 (evidence that ties were rotten throughout the entire length of fill where defect complained of, a low point, existed); Linton Coal, etc., Co. v. Persons, 11 Ind. App. 264, 39 N. E. 214 (testimony of former mining boss that he told defendant of the dangerous conditions); Stoutenburgh v. Dow, etc., Co., 82 Iowa 179, 47 N. W. 1039 (promise to another employee to remedy defect); Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Little, 19 Kan. 267 (conversations with superior servant); Palmer v. Coyle, 187 Mass. 136, 72 N. E. 844 (reputation of horse for viciousness); Bartolomeo v. McKnight, 178 Mass. 242, 59 N. E. 804 (statements to foreman); Brady v. Norcross, 174 Mass. 442, 54 N. E. 874 (conversation between two foremen); Dutro v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 111 Mo. App. 253, 86 S. W. 915 (notice to foreman); Franklin v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 97 Mo. App. 473, 71 S. W. 540 (defective condition of other tools); Soyer v. Great Falls Water Co., 15 Mont. 1, 37 Pac. 838 (evidence as to character of the soil of a track and defendant's means of knowledge thereof held admissible to show that props and braces should have been furnished); Ballard v. Hitchcock Mfg. Co., 71 Hun (N. Y.) 582, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 1101 [affirmed in 145 N. Y. 619, 22 N. E. 1131] (notice to officers of corporation); Nichols v. Brush, etc., Mfg. Co., 53 Hun (N. Y.) 137, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 60 [affirmed in 117 N. Y. 646, 22 N. E. 1131] (complaint by another employee to superintendent); McGarrity v. New York, etc., R. Co., 25 R. I. 269, 55 Atl. 718 (evidence as to looping of other trolleys in same yard); Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Lehmborg, 75 Tex. 61, 12 S. W. 838 (knowledge implied promise of safer engines); Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Boyce, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 87 S. W. 395 (occurrence of other storms of as great violence admissible to show that storm should have been anticipated and its effects guarded against); Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Gormley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 1051 (notice to agent); Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 583, 24 S. W. 686 (notice to telegraph operator); Lane v. Bauserman, 103 Va. 146, 48 S. E. 857, 106 Am. St. Rep. 872 (notice to foreman); Czarecki v. Seattle, etc., R., etc., Co., 30 Wash. 288, 70 Pac. 750 (complaint by other servants to managers). And see Schultz v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 67 Wis. 616, 31 N. W. 321, 58 Am. Rep. 881, in which the evidence was rejected because it also tended to show assumption of risk by plaintiff.

12. Evidence must show general custom.—Jones v. Malvern Lumber Co., 58 Ark. 125, 23 S. W. 679; Robinson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Iowa 102, 32 N. W. 193; Couch v. Watson Coal Co., 46 Iowa 17; Dolan v. Boot Cotton Mills, 185 Mass. 576, 70 N. E. 1025; McCarthy v. Boston Duck Co., 165 Mass. 165, 42 N. E. 568; Saucier v. New Hampshire Spinning Mills, 72 N. H. 292, 56 Atl. 545.

13. Alabama.—Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Mansell, 138 Ala. 548, 36 So. 459.

Arkansas.—Jones v. Malvern Lumber Co., 58 Ark. 125, 23 S. W. 679.

Illinois.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435 [affirming 109 Ill. App. 468]; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Howell, 208 Ill. 155, 70 N. E. 15 [affirming 109 Ill. App. 546]; Stover Mfg. Co. v. Millane, 89 Ill. App. 532. Compare Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kinare, 115 Ill. App. 132. But see Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Driscoll, 176 Ill. 330, 52 N. E. 921 [reversing 70 Ill. App. 91], holding that evidence that other railroad companies had in their switch yards butt posts or other obstacles at the ends of stub tracks is inadmissible to show negligence of defendant company in failing to have them.

Indiana.—Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Bundy, 152 Ind. 590, 53 N. E. 175, holding that defendant could show the practice of roads generally in the construction of interlocking switches on one of which plaintiff was injured, but cannot show particulars of construction other than on its own road.

Iowa.—Schroeder v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 128 Iowa 365, 103 N. W. 985; Hamilton v. Mendota Coal, etc., Co., 120 Iowa 147, 94 N. W. 282.

Massachusetts.—The admission or exclusion of evidence of custom is within the discretion of the trial court. Ford v. Mt. Tom Sulphite Pulp Co., 172 Mass. 544, 52 N. E. 1065, 48 L. R. A. 96; Veginan v. Morse, 160 Mass. 143, 35 N. E. 451. See also Myers v. Hudson Iron Co., 150 Mass. 125, 22 N. E. 631, 15 Am. St. Rep. 176. Compare French v. Columbia Spinning Co., 169 Mass. 531, 48 N. E. 269.

Minnesota.—Anderson v. Fielding, 92 Minn. 42, 99 N. W. 357, 104 Am. St. Rep. 665.

Mississippi.—Southern R. Co. v. McLellan, 80 Miss. 700, 32 So. 283.

Where it is charged that the injury was caused by reason of the absence of an appliance, it is competent to show that such an appliance was in common use by defendant;¹⁴ and where it is in issue whether an obstruction over a railroad track was too low for a brakeman on top of a car to pass under it safely, evidence as to the height of ordinary freight cars on the road is relevant.¹⁵ But testimony as to the custom of a railroad company in making examinations of appliances,¹⁶ or that it ordinarily keeps its tracks in good condition,¹⁷ or that its road compares favorably in construction with other roads,¹⁸ is inadmissible, and where an injury is caused by the negligent use of an appliance or place, the fact that it is stronger or safer than such appliances or places usually are is immaterial.¹⁹

(3) INSPECTION, REPAIR, AND TEST. In an action for injuries alleged to have been caused by defective or dangerous machinery, or places for work, any facts are admissible in evidence, on the question of defendant's negligence, which tend to show whether or not he has exercised due care with regard to the inspection, repair, and test of such instrumentalities or places.²⁰

Vermont.—See Congdon v. Howe Scale Co., 66 Vt. 255, 29 Atl. 253, holding that, in an action for injury caused by the bursting of an emery wheel, where the negligence charged was defendant's failure to guard the wheel, he could not show that other factories furnished no guards for such wheels, in the absence of proof that the conditions under which they were operated were the same as those under which plaintiff operated his wheel when injured.

Washington.—Crooker v. Pacific Lounge, etc., Co., 34 Wash. 191, 75 Pac. 632.

Wisconsin.—See Kreider v. Wisconsin River Paper, etc., Co., 110 Wis. 645, 86 N. W. 662. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 921.

But see Henion v. New York, etc., R. Co., 79 Fed. 903, 25 C. C. A. 223.

Evidence limited to general custom of well-regulated and prudently managed companies see Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435 [affirming 109 Ill. App. 468].

Height of bridges.—In an action by a brakeman for injuries caused by coming in contact with the roof of a covered bridge while riding on top of an unusually high car, it is error to admit evidence that the roof of such bridge was lower than ordinary railroad bridges, since the roof might be lower than those of other bridges, and yet be safe. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Walter, 147 Ill. 60, 35 N. E. 529.

Illinois.—Pardridge v. Gilbride, 98 Ill. App. 134, holding that evidence showing an inspection of an elevator by an official inspector is competent, as showing an exercise of some degree of care by the proprietors.

Iowa.—See Knapp v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 71 Iowa 41, 32 N. W. 18, holding that evidence of repairs to a railroad track must tend to show that they were made at the place of the accident.

Michigan.—Greenfield v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 117 Mich. 307, 75 N. W. 616.

New York.—Rollings v. Levering, 18 N. Y. App. Div. 223, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 942.

Ohio.—New York, etc., R. Co. v. Ellis, 13 Ohio Cir. Ct. 704, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 304.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 922.

Evidence of rules providing for inspection admissible see Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Carr, 43 S. W. 193, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1172.

General custom as to inspection admissible see Hover v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 89 S. W. 1084.

Evidence as to customary test.—In an action for the death of a fireman as a result of a defect in defendant's boiler which could have been discovered by hydrostatic test, evidence that it was the practice to make such test was admissible. Bell v. Consolidated

(g) *Methods of Work and Rules*²¹ — (1) IN GENERAL. When relevant and material to the issue,²² not only defendant's rules,²³ but any facts which tend to show negligence or due care on his part with respect to rules and methods of work²⁴ are admissible in evidence.

(2) CUSTOMARY METHODS.²⁵ Where such evidence has a tendency to show or disprove defendant's negligence,²⁶ it is competent to prove what is the usual

Gas, etc., Heat, etc., Co., 36 N. Y. App. Div. 242, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 780.

Want of car-inspectors.—In an action for injuries to an employee occurring from a failure to sufficiently and properly inspect the freight cars of the employer, evidence that it had formerly had two inspectors at the place of the injury, but had none at the time of the accident, was competent, as tending to prove the want of ordinary care on the part of the employer to have its cars sufficiently inspected. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 61 S. W. 978. See also Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Crowder, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 55 S. W. 380.

Negative evidence.—Where employers were injured by the falling of a derrick, evidence that they saw no one inspect it, or go up the mast to oil the parts, or for any other purpose, is admissible to show want of inspection. McMahon v. McHale, 174 Mass. 320, 54 N. E. 854. Compare Duntley v. Inman, 42 Oreg. 334, 70 Pac. 529, 59 L. R. A. 785, in which it was held that the fact that one who goes to work in a mill during the night never saw the pulleys therein tested is no evidence that they were not properly inspected and examined.

That a defect might easily have been remedied is admissible in evidence. Belle of Nelson Distilling Co. v. Riggs, 104 Ky. 1, 45 S. W. 99, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 499; Turner v. Goldsboro Lumber Co., 119 N. C. 387, 26 S. E. 23.

21. Admissibility of rules to show absence of contributory negligence see infra, IV, H, 3, b, (vi), (H).

22. A rule relating exclusively to the duty of station agents is inadmissible in behalf of plaintiff, where the injuries were received at a flag station where no agent was kept. Hewitt v. Flint, etc., R. Co., 67 Mich. 61, 34 N. W. 659.

Disputes between an inferior and superior mining boss, relative to the management of the lifting cars while repairs were making in the slope, are inadmissible to show negligence on the part of the mining company in employing a dangerous method of work, in an action by plaintiff, who was assisting in the repairs, and was fully aware of the danger. Jenkins v. Mahopac Iron-Ore Co., 10 N. Y. Suppl. 484.

23. Alabama.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Morgan, 114 Ala. 449, 22 So. 20.

Indiana.—Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Bundy, 152 Ind. 590, 53 N. E. 175.

Wisconsin.—Dugan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 85 Wis. 609, 55 N. W. 894.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 924.

Where defendant introduced its "standard code of train rules," in force at the time of the accident, it was not error to exclude testimony as to a certain rule, in the absence of an offer to show that there were oral rules, and that plaintiff knew them. Galveston etc., R. Co. v. Pitts, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 255.

24. Palmer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 87 Mich. 281, 49 N. W. 613; Mengle v. McClintic-Marshall Constr. Co., 89 N. Y. App. Div. 334, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 1012.

Facts showing construction of rules admissible see Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Andrews, 14 Ohio Cir. Ct. 564, 8 Ohio Cir. Dec. 73; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Pierce, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 597, 25 S. W. 1052.

Evidence that a rule has been abolished is admissible to show that the propriety of the rule was recognized by defendant, and that his attention was called to the necessity of such a rule. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Starkey, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 700, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 5.

25. Customary appliances and places for work see supra, IV, H, 3, b, (iii), (F), (2).

26. Materiality and relevancy necessary.—Alabama.—Tennessee Coal, etc., Co. v. Hansford, 125 Ala. 349, 28 So. 45, 82 Am. St. Rep. 241 (in which the issue was whether a headlight was burning at the time of the injury, and it was held that evidence of defendant's custom of lighting the headlight was immaterial); Woodward Iron Co. v. Herndon, 114 Ala. 191, 21 So. 430.

Georgia.—East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Kane, 92 Ga. 187, 18 S. E. 18, 22 L. R. A. 315, holding that in an action for injuries resulting in part from a misplaced switch defendant cannot show "the common experience of railroads" in getting back switch keys from their employees, and that all railroads have great difficulty in keeping up with such keys, and having them returned by discharged employees.

Illinois.—North Chicago Rolling-Mill Co. v. Johnson, 114 Ill. 57, 29 N. E. 186, in which method of work, either with defendant or others in the same business, under similar conditions.²⁷

(H) Warning and Instructing Servant. Where such evidence is relevant,²⁸ it is permissible to show any facts which tend to establish or negative defendant's negligence in failing to give reasonable and proper warning and instruction to plaintiff with regard to the dangers of the employment;²⁹ and even where no legal obligation rested upon defendant to erect warnings or "telltales," the failure to do so may be proved, as tending to show that the servant did not know of, and had not been warned of, the existence of the obstruction, or the danger thereof.³⁰

(I) *Employment or Retention of Incompetent Servants*³¹—(1) IN GENERAL. In an action by a servant for personal injuries, evidence tending to show incompetency on the part of another servant, together with evidence tending to show that the injuries were caused by reason of such incompetency, and that the master knew, or, in the exercise of due care, should have known, of such incompetency, is admissible.³²

the accident might have resulted whether the customary method was followed or not.

Iowa.—Meloy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1888) 37 N. W. 335, 77 Iowa 743, 42 N. W. 563, 14 Am. St. Rep. 325, 4 L. R. A. 287.

Texas.—Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Hockaday, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 613, 37 S. W. 475, holding that evidence that another road maintained its track in a similar condition to defendant's was irrelevant.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 925.

Evidence of a customary disregard of a rule of a railroad company by its employees, with the knowledge and approval of the agents of the company, is competent to show that the rule was abrogated or waived. Wright v. Southern Pac. Co., 14 Utah 383, 46 Pac. 374.

Rule of another road held admissible see Devoe v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 174 N. Y. 1, 66 N. E. 568 [reversing 70 N. Y. App. Div. 495, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 136].

28. In an action by a railroad employee for injuries, it is error to permit him to show what his instructions were as to flagging trains, when he was not injured while performing such duty. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Lyons, 119 Pa. St. 324, 13 Atl. 205.

(2) RETENTION OR DISCHARGE AFTER ACCIDENT. The mere fact that a servant is retained in, or discharged from, the service after an accident is not admissible to show his incompetency;³³ but where defendant, in an action for injuries not alleged to have been caused by the incompetency of a fellow servant, depends on the ground that the injuries were due to a fellow servant's negligence, plaintiff may show that it was an imperative rule with defendant either to discharge, suspend, or reprimand employees guilty of such negligence as that alleged by defendant, and that the servant in question was not discharged, suspended, or reprimanded;³⁴ and evidence of the retention of a negligent servant in the service of a corporation after the injury has been held admissible as characterizing the animus of those controlling the corporation, and as an ingredient in the measure of damages where the fact was known to the officer or agent of the company having power to discharge him.³⁵

(3) OTHER ACTS OF NEGLIGENCE. In an action for injuries alleged to have resulted from the incompetency of a fellow servant, evidence of prior specific acts of such servant indicating incompetency is admissible upon the question of his competency,³⁶ but not to show negligence in doing or omitting the act

Granite Co., 3 Pennew. 423, 52 Atl. 332, holding that evidence that a number of men refused to work with a servant was admissible to show his incompetency and the master's knowledge thereof.

(c) Other Acts of Negligence. Other disconnected acts of negligence are not admissible to show that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence when injured.⁶⁰

(d) Scope of Employment. On an issue of contributory negligence, evidence is admissible to show whether or not the injured servant was acting in the line of his duty at the time of his injury.⁶¹

(e) Duty to Discover or Remedy Defect. Evidence is admissible, on an issue of contributory negligence, which tends to show whether the injured servant was negligent in failing to discover or remedy the defect which resulted in his injury.⁶²

(f) Precautions Against Known Dangers. Whether a servant, after discovering his danger, took reasonable precautions to avoid it, is pertinent on an issue of contributory negligence.⁶³

(g) Disobedience of Rules or Orders. Where a servant is charged with contributory negligence in having failed to obey a rule or order of the master, the rule or order itself, or evidence tending to establish it, together with evidence tending to show its violation, and that the servant knew, or, in the exercise of due care, ought to have known, of its existence, is admissible.⁶⁴ Evidence is also

(H) Methods of Work—(1) IN GENERAL. On an issue of contributory negligence, evidence is admissible which tends to establish or negative negligence on the part of plaintiff in the method adopted by him.⁶⁶

(2) CUSTOMARY METHODS. Where a servant is charged with contributory negligence in the method adopted by him in doing his work, it is competent to show his usual method of work,⁶⁷ and also the customary method of others for doing similar work,⁶⁸ unless such method is in itself negligent.⁶⁹

tial as well as direct.⁷² So much at least is required of him, and if he falls short of the requirement a recovery is precluded, even over the verdict of a jury;⁷³ and even in the case of matters of defense, when it clearly appears from plaintiff's own evidence that he cannot recover in any event, the court cannot ignore the facts so presented, although introduced in support of the main action.⁷⁴

(II) EXISTENCE OF RELATION.⁷⁵ Plaintiff in a personal injury action must show by a preponderance of evidence, direct or circumstantial, that the relation of master and servant existed between himself and defendant,⁷⁶ and the same is true where it becomes necessary to prove the existence of the relation between defendant and a third person.⁷⁷

(III) CAUSE OF INJURY.⁷⁸ In a servant's personal injury action, where the circumstances show nothing as to the real cause of the injury, there is a failure of proof;⁷⁹ and the same is true where the evidence fails to show with some degree of certainty that the negligence alleged was the cause of the injuries.⁸⁰ guilty of contributory negligence, it should be submitted to the jury.¹⁶ Where the evidence as to contributory negligence is such that reasonable minds might honestly differ, a finding either way cannot be said to be insufficiently supported by the evidence.¹⁷

4. MEASURE OF DAMAGES — a. In General.¹⁸ Unless limited by statute,¹⁹ the general rule is that a servant is entitled to recover compensatory damages for injuries due to the master's negligence.²⁰ In some jurisdictions, where the master is only concurrently negligent, the negligence of the servant²¹ or of a fellow servant²² will be considered in mitigation of damages. In an action for the death of a servant, the measure of damages is only the pecuniary value of the life of the servant to his next of kin; and the fact that the injury was wilful cannot be considered to enhance the recovery.²³

b. Exemplary Damages. In the absence of wanton, gross, or reckless negli-

The test is that the question should not be submitted, if the court would be bound to set aside a verdict for plaintiff.⁴⁸

(B) Rules—(1) CONSTRUCTION. The construction of rules promulgated by a master is a question of law for the court.⁴⁹

(2) DUTY TO PROMULGATE AND ENFORCE. Whether a master was negligent in making and promulgating rules for the protection of his servants, or in failing to use due care and diligence, after the promulgation of a necessary rule, to have it enforced, is, under evidence from which reasonable men might differ as to whether the duty has been performed, a question for the jury.⁵⁰ But the question whether the master was negligent is for the court, in the absence of any evidence showing the necessity, practicability, and utility of such rules,⁵¹ or their applicability to the case.⁵²

(3) REASONABLENESS AND SUFFICIENCY. The reasonableness of any rule for the government of servants in the course of their employment is a question of law for the court,⁵³ while its adequacy and sufficiency is a question for the jury,⁵⁴ provided there is any evidence upon which to base a submission of the question.⁵⁵

(4) WAIVER. The question as to whether a rule of an employer respecting the conduct of his business has been waived by him is for the jury.⁵⁶

(c) Orders. The question whether an order was or was not in fact given,⁵⁷ and if so, whether it was negligently given,⁵⁸ and was the cause of the injury,⁵⁹ is for the jury, where there is evidence upon which to base its submission.⁶⁰

(v) WARNING AND INSTRUCTING SERVANT. In accordance with well settled general principles, whether the master was guilty of negligence with respect to warning and instructing the injured servant is a question of fact for the jury,⁶¹

It is proper for the court, in charging the jury, to require them to find whether the evidence establishes the existence of the speci-

an instruction, in some respects deficient, may be aided by other instructions which fully state the law.⁹⁰ Mere errors of form or phraseology which could not possibly have misled the jury are immaterial.⁹¹

(II) CONFLICT OF LAWS. It is the duty of the court of the state in which an action for personal injuries is brought, alleged to have occurred in another state, to instruct the jury fully as to any conflict in the laws of the two states relative to the liability of the master to his servant.⁹²

(III) RELATION OF PARTIES. Where the relation of the parties is in issue, the court should upon request or of its own motion properly instruct the jury thereon.⁹³

fied group of facts which, if true, would in law establish plaintiff's cause of action or defendant's defense, and to instruct the jury that, if they find such group of facts to be established by the evidence, they should find in favor of the respective party. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Buch, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 283, 65 S. W. 681.

Gross negligence.—In an action for an injury from gross negligence, the court should instruct as to what constitutes gross negligence. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Lewallen, 32 S. W. 958, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 863.

92. In Texas a master cannot be held liable for the consequences of the negligence of a fellow servant of plaintiff, the master's servant. In Kansas the rule is otherwise. In a suit brought in Kansas against a railroad corporation by a brakeman to recover damages for injuries caused in Texas by the negligence of the employees of the corporation, whose duty it was to give notice of a fall of gravel on the track, the judge presiding at the trial failed to make clear to the jury the distinction between the rule prevailing in Texas and that prevailing in Kansas, and a verdict was rendered for plaintiff. It was held that a new trial should be granted. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 29 Kan. 632.

In an action in North Carolina against a railroad company for wrongfully causing the death of an engineer on a part of its road in South Carolina, an attorney from the latter state testified that, under the constitution of that state, knowledge by the deceased of the dangerous condition of the trestle by the falling of which he was killed would not defeat recovery for his death, and cited South Carolina cases in support of his statement. On cross-examination, witness testified that any degree of contributory negligence would defeat recovery, and defined "contributory negligence." It was held to sustain an instruction that if the trestle was defective, to the knowledge of defendant, knowledge by deceased of its dangerous condition would not defeat recovery. Harrill v. South Carolina, etc., R. Co., 135 N. C. 601, 47 S. E. 730.

should consider and give proper weight to the instincts and presumptions which naturally lead men to avoid injury and preserve their own lives, in determining whether, at the time he was injured, plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care.²

(vi) CAUSE OF INJURY. In an action by a servant against the master to recover for personal injuries, the jury should be instructed as to the distinction between proximate and remote cause,³ and as to the necessity of finding that the negligence charged did in fact contribute to cause the injury.⁴ Where negligence is charged in two or more particulars, an instruction which requires the jury to find that the injury was caused by negligence in each particular is erroneous;⁵ and as in other cases an instruction upon causation must be supported by evidence tending to show that the injury was caused by the negligence with respect to which the instruction is requested.⁶ An instruction need not embrace negligence which was an incident to, and not the proximate cause of, the injury.⁷

(vii) ACCIDENTAL OR IMPROBABLE INJURY. Where, in a personal injury action, there is evidence tending to support defendant's theory that the injury was of an accidental or improbable character, the court should instruct the jury as to the meaning of "accident,"⁸ and as to the law with respect to accidental injuries,⁹ applying the principle, in a proper case, to the specific defense relied on.¹⁰ But where the jury have been charged as to the burden of proof, and as to what facts will raise a presumption of liability against the master, it is not error to omit to charge, in the same connection, the law applicable to defendant's theory that the injury was a mere accident, it being sufficient if the law bearing on such theory is elsewhere charged.¹¹

tiff's tender age and youthful instincts and his exposure to danger are erroneous and properly refused.⁴³

(iii) CHOICE OF DANGEROUS METHOD OF WORK. An instruction as to the effect of the choice by plaintiff of a dangerous method of doing his work, when other safer methods were open to him, is insufficient if it omits the essential element of his knowledge of such safer methods;⁴⁴ and it is proper to refuse to charge that if, among different modes of performing his duty, some of which were safe, plaintiff chose one which was less safe, he took the risk of his choice, as this is but a circumstance which the jury should consider with the other facts in determining whether plaintiff was at fault.⁴⁵

(iv) RISKS OUTSIDE SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT. Where there is evidence tending to show that the servant was injured while voluntarily performing work outside the scope of his employment,⁴⁶ the court should instruct the jury that, if he undertook to do something which it was not duty to do, he assumed all the risk in that undertaking.⁴⁷

(v) NOTICE OR COMPLAINT TO MASTER, AND PROMISE OF REMEDY. Where there is evidence to show notice or complaint to the master by the servant of a defect or danger, and a promise by the master or his agent to remedy the defect or remove the danger, the jury should be instructed as to the effect of such notice or complaint and promise on the servant's assumption of risk in continuing the work;⁴⁸ and it is proper to instruct the jury that when a servant complains of defective machinery which the master refused to repair and directs him to proceed, unless the defect is so palpable that only a reckless man would do so, the servant may presume that the master considers it reasonably safe.⁴⁹

(vi) CONCURRENT NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER. An instruction upon assumption of risk by a servant which ignores the question of concurrent negligence on the part of the master or of someone for whose negligence the master is responsible is erroneous.⁵⁰ But where the jury is instructed as to assumption of risk, an

45. Central R. Co. v. De Bray, 71 Ga. 406.

46. Where there is evidence that the work was within the servant's duties, it is proper to charge as to the assumption by him of the ordinary risks of his employment. Millar v. Madison Car Co., 130 Mo. 517, 31 S. W. 574.

47. Hamrick v. Balfour Quarry Co., 132 N. C. 282, 43 S. E. 820.

48. An instruction is erroneous which lacks the essential element that a servant does not assume the risk of defective or dangerous appliances, where he objects or protests to the master against the continuance of the defects. Greenleaf v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 33 Iowa 52.

An instruction which omits the element of a promise to repair, express or fairly implied, is erroneous and should not be given. McKelvey v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 35 W. Va. 500, 14 S. E. 261.

Obvious and imminent danger.—An instruction is misleading which fails to state that plaintiff was not justified in relying on a promise to remove a danger which is so obvious and imminent that no person of ordinary prudence would under like circumstances have exposed himself to it. Kansas, etc., Coal Co. v. Chandler, 71 Ark. 518, 77 S. W. 912.

Instruction held justified by the evidence see Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. v. Pouch, 124 Fed. 148, 61 C. C. A. 40.

instruction on the master's duties is not erroneous for failure to mention the question of the servant's assumption of risk.⁵¹

e. Contributory Negligence⁵²—(1) IN GENERAL. Where an instruction on contributory negligence is applicable to the pleadings and facts in a personal injury case,⁵³ the court should correctly instruct the jury as to what constitutes, and the effect of, such negligence,⁵⁴ and also as to the degree of care required of cause.⁵⁹ To entitle defendant to an instruction grouping the evidence on an issue of contributory negligence, the facts must have been specifically pleaded.⁶⁰

(II) SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT. Where there is evidence tending to show that a servant was injured while doing work outside of the scope of his employment,⁶¹ it is proper to instruct the jury that the servant cannot recover, if the injury occurred while he was in the performance of an act outside of his duties, and that the scope of duty within which a servant is entitled to protection is to be defined by what he was employed to perform, and what, with the knowledge and approval of the employer, he did perform, rather than by the verbal designation of his position.⁶²

(III) INEXPERIENCED OR YOUTHFUL SERVANTS. In an action for injuries to an inexperienced or youthful servant, the jury should be charged to consider the servant's experience, age, capacity, and appearance on the question of contributory negligence, and on the question of how much instruction and care he was entitled to, and it is not sufficient to charge generally upon 'his duty to exercise reasonable care.'⁶³

(iv) DUTY TO DISCOVER OR REMEDY DEFECT.⁶⁴ An instruction, in an action by a servant for personal injuries, which ignores the duty of the servant to inform himself of the surroundings and perils attendant on the nature of the service in which he was engaged at the time of his injury, and which were open to his observation in the exercise of reasonable care on his part, is erroneous;⁶⁵ and where there is a distinct issue made as to whether it was the duty of plaintiff to inspect the machinery, appliances, or place of work, the court should charge that, if such duty rested on him, he cannot recover for any defects which he might have discovered by inspection.⁶⁶ So too, where there is evidence to show that it was the servant's duty to see that the appliances or place of work were kept in a reasonably safe condition the court should give a proper instruction presenting the subject of his duty to the jury.⁶⁷ Where the court has fully charged as to contributory negligence, a refusal to charge that it was the servant's duty to take notice of the visible circumstances affecting his safety is not error.⁶⁸

(v) METHODS OF WORK. Where there is evidence that plaintiff's injuries were caused by the method of work adopted by him,⁶⁹ the jury should be instructed that if plaintiff was guilty of negligence in the method of work adopted by him, and this negligence contributed to his injury, he cannot recover, and that he was bound to exercise such care as was commensurate with the danger of his employment at the time of the injury, and that if he did not use such care, and by its exercise could have avoided the injury, he cannot recover;⁷⁰ and where it appears that there were two ways in which a servant might have performed his work

Where plaintiff was of mature years, and, while it was alleged that he was inexperienced in the work, it appeared that the danger was open to the observation of any one of ordinary mental capacity, it was held error to refuse a charge that if such danger was as much open to the observation of plaintiff as it was to that of defendant's foreman, under whose direction he was working, plaintiff could not recover, as in such case he assumed the risk. with reasonable despatch, one safe and the other attended with danger, and the servant adopted the dangerous way, failure, on request, to instruct that the burden rests on the servant to remove the presumption of negligence, and to show that he was exercising ordinary care before he can recover, is prejudicial error.⁷¹

(vi) DISOBEDIENCE OF RULES AND ORDERS. Where there is evidence to justify an instruction thereon,⁷² the court should instruct the jury as to the effect of a servant's knowingly violating a rule or order,⁷³ and as to the effect of acquiescence in such violation on the part of the master or his representative.⁷⁴ An instruction which ignores the element of the servant's knowledge of a rule,⁷⁵ which excludes the effect of contributory negligence in defeating a recovery,⁷⁶ or which ignores precautions shown to have been taken by the servant to comply with the rule he is charged with having violated⁷⁷ is erroneous. Where the evidence warrants it, it is proper to instruct that if plaintiff violated a rule of defendant, and his injuries were the result thereof, he will not be debarred from recovery, if under the circumstances a reasonably prudent person would have done as he did.⁷⁸

(vii) COMPLIANCE WITH COMMANDS. In an action by a servant, injured while acting in obedience to the order of his master or of one for whose negli-

Where evidence of a rule has been properly excluded, it is proper to refuse to instruct that plaintiff could not recover if such a rule existed, and was known to him, and if the failure to comply therewith contributed to his injury. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Lamothe, 76 Tex. 219, 13 S. W. 194.

In the case of disobedience of an order by a convict, an instruction requested by defendant, that if there was such an order, and this fact was known to plaintiff, it was his duty to comply therewith strictly, and his failure so to do was negligence which would prevent his recovery, should be given, but upon the hypothesis of duress and fear of punishment. Knoxville Iron Co. v. Smith, 86 Tenn. 45, 5 S. W. 438.

Mere omission of comma in instruction immaterial see Jarvis v. Flint, etc., R. Co., 128 Mich. 61, 87 N. W. 136.

74. Where there is evidence of such habitual violation of certain rules that the master was presumably aware of such violation and approved of it, it is proper to refuse instructions in regard to the violation of such rules that omit all reference to the question of the master's acquiescence therein. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Flynn, 154 Ill. 488, 40 N. E. 332 [affirming 54 Ill. App. 387].

Instance of correct instructions.—The instruction: "If you find there was a rule prohibiting brakemen from uncoupling cars while in motion, or, if there was a rule requiring the brakeman, before taking charge of a train, to inspect the coupling appliances of the cars, and such rules were brought to the plaintiff's notice . . . and [he] neglected to comply with either of said rules, and such neglect was the cause of the injury, then the plaintiff cannot recover, unless you find . . . that the brakemen habitually disregarded them, with the acquiescence and knowledge of defendant," correctly states the law governing the observance of rules by employees. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Reagan, 96 Tenn. 128, 139, 33 S. W. 1050. See also Prather v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 80 Ga. 427, 9 S. E. 530, 12 Am. St. Rep. 263. Compare Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Myers, 86 Ill. App. 401, where an instruction on waiver of a rule by the master was held to be misleading, in that it implied that plaintiff was relieved of exercising due care for his own safety, irrespective of the rule.

75. Conners v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 87 Iowa 147, 53 N. W. 1092.

Instructions withdrawing all inquiry as to plaintiff's knowledge of a rule which he had violated from the jury are properly refused. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Perry, 87 Ala. 392, 6 So. 40.

76. Deeds v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 69 Iowa 164, 28 N. W. 488, in which the jury were instructed that a servant, injured solely on account of his negligence in violating the master's rules, cannot recover.

78. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Mortensen, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 106, 66 S. W. 99.

gence the master is responsible, the question of contributory negligence is properly presented to the jury by an instruction which states in effect that plaintiff will not be barred from recovery by the fact that the work was dangerous, unless the danger was so obvious and imminent, and the injury thereby so inevitable, that a man of ordinary prudence would refuse to obey, if ordered by his master to do it.⁷⁹

(viii) ACTS IN EMERGENCIES. Where there is evidence upon which to base an instruction upon the doctrine of emergency or sudden danger,⁸⁰ it is proper to instruct the jury that a man under sudden excitement or peril is only required to exercise such care for his safety as an ordinarily prudent man would have exercised under the circumstances, and if he exercised such degree of care, then in that case he is not guilty of contributory negligence.⁸¹ Such an instruction should, however, refer to the question as to whether the servant had time, after knowing his danger, to protect himself.⁸²

(ix) INJURY AVOIDABLE BY CARE OF MASTER. Where there is evidence to justify an instruction upon the doctrine of discovered peril,⁸³ the court should instruct the jury that a servant may recover notwithstanding his own negligence, if defendant or his representative knew that he was negligent and in danger long enough before the accident to have prevented it, in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care;⁸⁴ and an instruction which in effect withdraws the issue of discovered peril raised by the evidence from the jury is properly refused.⁸⁵

8. VERDICT AND FINDINGS⁸⁶ — a. General Verdict. In an action by a servant for an injury claimed to be due to defendant's negligence, a general verdict is conclusive on the questions of contributory negligence and assumed risk;⁸⁷ and where the act or omission complained of constitutes actionable negligence, a general verdict for plaintiff includes a finding that the negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.⁸⁸

b. Sufficiency of Findings to Sustain Verdict or Judgment. In order to support a verdict or judgment in a personal injury case,⁸⁹ special findings must be

It is erroneous to instruct that "it is in general the duty of an employe to obey the orders of his superior, and in the absence of knowledge or means of knowledge to the contrary, he may presume it safe for him to do so," in that it implies that the servant might, as a matter of law, presume it safe for him to obey the command. *Chicago, etc., R. findings. Such a judgment is so manifestly erroneous that it will be reversed, although no other error is disclosed.⁹⁴

c. Responsiveness to Issues and Instructions. To be upheld, the verdict and special findings of the jury in a personal injury action must be responsive to the issues and instructions;⁹⁵ and it is improper to submit special interrogatories which do not conform to the issues.⁹⁶ The fact that the jury makes a finding upon an immaterial issue is not ground for exception.⁹⁷

d. Construction. The verdict and findings of the jury in an action by a servant to recover for personal injuries are to be construed reasonably, and are not to be set aside unless clearly erroneous or insufficient.⁹⁸

9. NEW TRIAL. It is error to refuse a new trial where the great preponderance of evidence is against the finding of the jury.⁹⁹

10. APPEAL AND ERROR¹—a. In General. An appeal or writ of error in an action by a servant to recover from his master for personal injuries is governed by the general rules of law governing such proceedings in other civil actions.²

2. Connecticut.—Nolan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 70 Conn. 159, 39 Atl. 115, 43 L. R. A. 305, holding that where every special fact from which the court inferred the liability of defendant is found, its inferences are reviewable as conclusions of law.

Georgia.—East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 90 Ga. 558, 16 S. E. 950, holding that where there is evidence to sustain the verdict, the discretion of the court in refusing to grant a new trial will not be overruled.

Illinois.—Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Swan, 70 Ill. App. 331, to the effect that failure to state in the declaration that the servant by whose negligence plaintiff was injured was not a fellow servant is a defect cured by verdict.

b. Review of Questions of Fact. Ordinarily, where there is any evidence which, if believed by the jury, is legally sufficient, or might reasonably tend to support the verdict or findings of fact of the jury, the appellate court will not, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions, disturb such verdict or findings.³

Indiana.—Indianapolis Frog, etc., Co. v. Boyle, 18 Ind. App. 169, 47 N. E. 690, where it was held that an objection that a material averment of the complaint was defective cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

Kansas.—Walker v. Gillett, 59 Kan. 214, 52 Pac. 442, to the effect that a judgment for plaintiff will not be reversed for want of formal proof of a fact admitted by the answer, where no question as to it was raised at the trial, and the testimony and instructions of defendant were based on the theory of its truth.

Kentucky.—Ray v. Jeffries, 86 Ky. 367, 5 S. W. 867, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 602 (holding that a verdict for one cent will not be set aside on appeal, where defendant does not complain of it); Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hiltner, 60 S. W. 2, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1141 [reversing 56 S. W. 654, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1826] (holding that defendant cannot complain that the instructions given on plaintiff's motion did not specifically charge as to the contributory negligence, where the court on defendant's motion instructed the jury, in general terms, as to such negligence, and no more specific instruction was asked thereon).

Massachusetts.—Gagnon v. Seaconnet Mills, 165 Mass. 221, 43 N. E. 82, holding that where injuries are alleged to be due to the negligent manner in which defendant loaded timber on a carriage, and also for its failure to keep its "ways" (St. (1887) c. 270, § 1) in repair, and there is evidence to show negligence in loading the timber, refusal to instruct to find for defendant on the whole evidence does not bring up for review the question whether the road was a part of defendant's "ways."

Missouri.—Rutledge v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 110 Mo. 312, 19 S. W. 38, holding that where the record fails to show whether it is customary and prudent for switchmen to mount cars to uncouple them it cannot be said as a matter of law that it is contributory negligence to do so.

New York.—O'Connell v. Thompson-Starratt Co., 72 N. Y. App. Div. 47, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 296, to the effect that where plaintiff has recovered judgment on the ground of negligence, he must, on defendant's appeal, have the record show negligence, if it did so appear at the trial.

Pennsylvania.—Bentley v. Cranmer, 137 Pa. St. 244, 20 Atl. 709, holding that a claim that the case should have been taken from the jury on the ground of assumption of risk and contributory negligence cannot be considered in the absence of a request for a direction to find for defendant.

Tennessee.—Ferguson v. Phoenix Cotton Mills, 106 Tenn. 236, 61 S. W. 53, as to necessity of assignment that the evidence did not support the verdict.

Texas.—Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Sullivan, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 315, holding that where the jury found for plaintiff, under proper instructions as to the law, to which no exceptions were taken, it must be presumed on appeal that the jury found plaintiff not guilty of contributory negligence.

V. LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS.¹

A. Acts or Omissions of Servants²—1. GROUNDS ON WHICH MASTER HELD LIABLE — a. Enumeration. The master may be liable for the acts of his servant on either of the following grounds: (1) Negligence of the master in selecting his servants or instructing them as to the duties of their position;³ (2) an express demand to the servant to do the act resulting in the injury to the third person;⁴ (3) acquiescence in, or assent to, former like acts of the servant, or to the act in question;⁵ (4) the fact that the act of the servant was within the scope of his employment and in the line of his duties while engaged in such employment;⁶ and (5) ratification by the master of the act of the servant causing the injury to the third person.⁷ Of course the master is not liable where the employee himself would not be liable if he had acted in his own behalf instead of as a servant.⁸

b. Ratification by Master. By ratifying a wrongful act of a servant, the master may become liable in damages to a third person injured thereby, although he would not otherwise be liable.⁹ So, where otherwise liable for actual damages, ployment of an incompetent and negligent servant, without inquiry); Holladay v. Kennard, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 254, 20 L. ed. 390 (holding that where skill and capacity are required to accomplish an undertaking, it is negligence on the part of the master not to employ persons having such qualifications, and that such negligence will render him liable for injuries to third persons occasioned thereby); The Elton, 131 Fed. 562. the master's ratification may authorize the imposition of exemplary damages.¹⁰ What constitutes a ratification is generally a question of fact for the jury.¹¹ Retaining the guilty servant in the employ does not necessarily show a ratification of the act,¹² although it is some evidence of ratification where the master has knowledge of the facts.¹³

2. RELATION OF MASTER AND SERVANT—a. Necessity For Relationship. Before further considering when and under what circumstances one is liable to third persons injured by the act or omission of his workmen, it should be observed that the liability primarily rests on the existence of the relation of master and servant at the time of the act complained of. If that relation does not exist at that time the rule of respondet superior cannot apply.¹⁴

b. When Relationship Exists—(i) GENERAL RULES. To constitute the relationship of master and servant, in so far as the liability of the former for the acts of the latter is concerned, there need be no actual contract of employment,¹⁵ nor Ratification by corporation in general see CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 1208.

10. See DAMAGES, 13 Cyc. 114.

11. See infra, V, C, 7.

Evidence showing merely an unfriendly disposition toward plaintiff does not establish ratification. Arasmith v. Temple, 11 Ill. App. 39.

Making payment to wrong-doer.—The owner of a building is liable for the value of bricks wrongfully taken from a third person by the builder in erecting the same, after notice of the trespass, neglect to prevent their use, and payment of the builder. Dawson v. Powell, 9 Bush (Ky.) 663, 15 Am. Rep. 745. But a contractor, by accepting and paying for work done thereon by a mechanic, without his prior order or authority, does not render himself liable for injuries caused to a third person by a negligent act committed by the mechanic while doing the work, not a part or result of the work itself. Coomes v. Houghton, 102 Mass. 211.

Demand for payment.—Where plaintiff ordered coal of defendant, and a third person, without authority, delivered it, and in so doing negligently injured plaintiff's building, the fact that thereafter defendant demanded payment for the coal, with knowledge of the accident, constituted a ratification of the acts of the person delivering the coal. Dempsey v. Chambers, 154 Mass. 330, 28 N. E. 279, 26 Am. St. Rep. 249, 13 L. R. A. 219.

Knowledge of master.—The fact that in two isolated instances there has been an unauthorized departure from the prescribed order of business in a master's establishment does not charge him with liability to a third person for a further like departure by a servant, where the unauthorized acts were not brought to the master's attention. *Cogswell v. Source of information.—Where a tort is committed by a servant, it is not necessary, in order to show ratification by the master, that the information as to the tort should come from the injured person. Cobb v. Simon, 119 Wis. 597, 97 N. W. 276, 100 Am. St. Rep. 909.

Concurrent negligence.—Where the negligence of a bridge tender employed by defendant city, and that of a helper employed by the tender personally, without authority from the city, combined to cause injury to plaintiff, defendant was not free from liability because the helper was not its servant. Chicago v. O'Malley, 196 Ill. 197, 63 N. E. 652.

15. Gaines v. Bard, 57 Ark. 615, 22 S. W. 570, 38 Am. St. Rep. 266; Ward v. Young, 42 Ark. 542 (holding that the liability arises from the relation itself and not from the contract of employment); Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Gustafson, 21 Colo. 393, 41 Pac. 505; Althorff v. Wolfe, 22 N. Y. 355; Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt.

payment for the services.¹⁶ If one knowingly and without objection receives the benefits of labor, or holds out to the public one as engaged in his service, he is liable as a master for the acts of the latter as his servant,¹⁷ subject to the rule that the relation of master and servant cannot exist where the employment is for the prosecution of an unlawful business.¹⁸ The relation of master and servant exists where the employer selects the workman, and may remove or discharge him for misconduct, and may order not only what work shall be done, but the mode and manner of performance.¹⁹ The power to control the alleged servant is the test of the existence of the relationship.²⁰ Where the person employed is in the exercise of an independent and distinct employment, and not under the immediate control, direction, or supervision of the employer, the latter is not responsible for the acts of the former;²¹ and hence an independent contractor is not a servant so as to make a master liable for his acts or those of the contractor's servants.²² A lessee or licensee is not the servant of the lessor or licensor,²³ nor is an inmate of a hos-

178 (holding that where one volunteers to assist another in a piece of work and the latter consents thereto, they stand in the relation of master and servant).

The mere hiring of a person is not always sufficient to create the relation of master and servant. Boniface v. Relyea, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 457.

16. Gaines v. Bard, 57 Ark. 615, 22 S. W. 570, 38 Am. St. Rep. 266; Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Gustafson, 21 Colo. 393, 41 Pac. 505; Baldwin v. Abraham, 57 N. Y. App. Div. 67, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 1079; Beatty v. Thilemann, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 20, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 645.

Proof of relation but not test.—The fact that the men employed were paid by defendant for their services might, in the absence of evidence negating the relation of master and servant, be accepted as some proof of employment, but it is by no means the determining test. Beatty v. Thilemann, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 20, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 645.

Manner of paying for work.—It follows that the manner of paying for the work or thing done, whether by the day or job (Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63), or by commissions (Riggs v. Standard Oil Co., 130 Fed. 199) is immaterial.

Where the alleged master had no voice in the selection of the workmen it has been held that the relation did not exist. Cain v. Syracuse, etc., R. Co., 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 459, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 538.

Power to discharge.—A person cannot be held liable as master under the doctrine of respondet superior, unless he has the power of discharging the party whose negligent act occasions the injury complained of. Crudup v. Schreiner, 98 Ill. App. 337.

Grantor in deed of trust.—A grantor in a deed of trust, who constitutes the trustee his attorney in fact to take control of the mortgaged premises, receive the rents, pay the expenses and interest on the secured debt, etc., nevertheless remains the principal of an elevator operator hired by such trustee, and is responsible for his negligence, resulting in injury to a passenger. Luckel v. Century Bldg. Co., 177 Mo. 608, 76 S. W. 1035.

A medical officer of an accident insurance company, examining a person injured, as provided by the terms of the accident policy, is a servant of the company; and it is liable for injuries resulting from his negligence or misconduct. Tompkins v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 479, 44 S. E. 439, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1006, 62 L. R. A. 489.

Contract for piece of work.—The relation of master and servant is not created by a single contract between the parties to do a particular piece of work. Loughrain v. Auto-telephone Co., 77 N. Y. App. Div. 542, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 919.

20. Crudup v. Schreiner, 98 Ill. App. 337; Wadsworth Howland Co. v. Foster, 50 Ill. App. 513; Gahagan v. Aermotor Co., 67 Minn. 252, 69 N. W. 914; Long v. Richmond, 68 N. Y. And see infra, V, A, 2, b, (iv).

Overseer.—One who on account of peculiar skill is employed by the day to oversee work for his employer, and who takes the entire charge of it, is yet so far a servant that his employer is answerable for his misfeasance. Morgan v. Bowman, 22 Mo. 538.

21. De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368, Abrahams v. California Powder Works, 5 N. M. 479, 23 Pac. 785, 8 L. R. A. 378.

22. See infra, V, B, 2, a.

23. Fluker v. Georgia R., etc., Co., 81 Ga. 461, 8 S. E. 529, 12 Am. St. Rep. 328, 2 L. R. A. 843; Sawyer v. Martins, 25 Ill. App. 521; Blackwell v. Wiswall, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 355, 14 How. Pr. 257; Lefkowitz v. Harper, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 369, 2 Cinc. L. Bul. 197. But see Dillon v. Hunt, 82 Mo. 150 [affirming 11 Mo. App. 246], holding that the relation of master and servant exists between the owner of a building and others, whom he allows, after it is burned, to enter on the premises for the purpose of removing the debris, which they do so unskillfully that pital the servant of a superintendent of such hospital,²⁴ nor a convict a servant of the hirer of his services.²⁵ So railway postal clerks are not the servants of the railway company.²⁶

(II) ASSISTANTS PROCURED BY SERVANT. The master is liable for the negligence or other tort of persons employed by his servants in the prosecution of the master's business, or of persons who assist his servants at their request,²⁷ provided the servants had express or implied authority to procure assistance,²⁸ subject of course to the rule that the act resulting in the injury must be within the scope of the employment.²⁹ If the employment was authorized, the employing servant is not liable for the acts of the servant so employed.³⁰

(III) OFFICERS AS SERVANTS. The fact that the servant is also an officer of the law does not relieve the master from liability for his acts within the scope of his authority as servant.³¹ But if the act is done while in pursuance of his duty they knock down the walls of the house on adjoining premises.

Special police officer as servant.—Contrary to the rule stated in the text, it is held in some states that a special police officer appointed on the application of defendant and paid by him is not the mere servant of the person on whose premises he is appointed for duty and by whom his salary is paid, and such person is not responsible for his official acts. Healey v. Lothrop, 171 Mass. 263, 50 N. E. 540; Hershey v. O'Neill, 36 Fed. 168, construing New York statute. But see Illinois Steel Co. v. Novak, 84 Ill. App. 641 [affirmed in 184 Ill. 501, 56 N. Statutes.—Under a statute which provides that station agents of railroad companies shall preserve order in the waiting rooms, as a public officer rather than as the master's servant,³² or outside the scope of his authority as servant, although within his authority as a police officer,³³ the master is not liable.

(IV) *GENERAL AND SPECIAL EMPLOYMENT*³⁴—(A) In General. A person who avails himself of the use, temporarily, of the services of a servant regularly employed by another person may be liable as master for the acts of such servant during the temporary service.³⁵ The test is whether in the particular service which he is engaged or requested to perform he continues liable to the direction and control of his original master or becomes subject to that of the person to whom he is lent or hired, or who requests his services.³⁶ It is not so much the and giving them power to arrest persons guilty of disorderly conduct, they do not become officers of the law so as to prevent their acts from being imputable to the company. King v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 69 Miss. 245, 10 So. 42.

Mechanic sent to make repairs.—Where a mechanic in the general employ of defendant was sent by defendant, at the request of a third person, to repair certain machinery of the latter, and he was entirely under the latter's direction, who, however, relied largely on his skill and experience, the servant, in making the repairs, was the servant of the latter and not of defendant. *Samuelian v. If one person is under the immediate direction and control of another who may terminate such control by discharge, and direct him what work to do, when to do it, how to do it, and to designate the means to be employed in doing the work, the relation of master and servant between these persons is complete (Beatty v. Thilemann, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 20, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 645), and the fact that the services are paid for by another is of no importance (see supra, V, A, 2, b).

It is immaterial that the person hiring expressly asked for the services of the particular driver who caused the injury (Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice Co., 50 Mich. 516, 15 N. W. 887, 45 Am. Rep. 54), or that the arrangement is a continuing one, as where the same driver is always sent and he wears the livery of the hirer and has accepted gratuities from him (Quarman v. Burnett, 4 Jur. 969, 9 L. J. Exch. 308, 6 M. & W. 499).

Express directions of passenger.—A passenger in a carriage, who is driven by a servant of the carrier, and who requests the driver to pass a vehicle in front of them upon being assured by the driver that it can be done, is not responsible for an accident caused by a collision of the vehicles, since the driver does not become his servant. Richardson v. Van Ness, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 267, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 618.

Incompetency as distinguished from wilful acts.—If one agrees to furnish another with a team and suitable driver, he must bear all loss or damage occasioned to the team in consequence of the incapacity and negligence of the driver. Name on wagon.—The fact that the hirers, with the apparent sanction and assent of the original master, were permitted to put their own name and address upon the wagon as an advertisement to the general public that it was theirs, or at least in use in their business, is one of great significance in determining in whose service the driver is to be regarded as driving at the time of the accident. Howard v. Ludwig, 57 N. Y. App. Div. 94, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 1095.

Horse owned by hirer.—The owner of a brougham and horse, with its harness, kept them at a livery stable. He had no coachman, but hired a driver from the livery-stable keeper at a certain weekly sum. The livery-stable keeper paid the driver's wages. The owner of the equipage supplied the driver with a full set of livery clothes, and there was evidence that the driver had been approved of by the owner. The horse was new to London life and had only been driven a few times in the brougham by the driver, and its peculiarities were unknown both to the livery-stable keeper and to the driver. It was held that the driver was the servant of the owner of the equipage, who was liable for injuries caused to a third person through the negligence of the driver while driving the equipage. Jones v. Scullard, [1898] 2 Q. B.

c. Joint Employment. Where a servant is jointly employed by several persons who are not partners, each contributing to his wages, one of the masters is not liable for the misconduct of the servant while engaged solely in the service of another master.⁴⁵ On the other hand the fact that a servant is employed by two or more, such as a flagman at a railroad crossing, does not exonerate from liability the master in whose service he is negligent or otherwise commits a tort.⁴⁶

d. Termination of Relation. When the relation is terminated, either temporarily or permanently, of course the master is no longer liable because of any future acts of the sometime servant before the relationship is resumed.⁴⁷

e. Persons to Whom Master Is Liable. The master is ordinarily not liable to a fellow servant of the one whose act was the cause of the injury,⁴⁸ nor to volunteers or others assisting the servant, except as modified by the rules as to assumption of risk and acts of fellow servants.⁴⁹ He may be liable, however, to the servant of his independent contractor injured by the acts of his servant.⁵⁰

3. NATURE OF ACT OR OMISSION—a. Scope of Employment—(1) GENERAL RULE. The primary test to determine the master's liability for the act of his servant is whether the act was within the scope of his employment.⁵¹ The master is liable for the act of a servant within the scope of his employment,⁵² but is not

Reason for rule.—The liability of the master to answer for the conduct of his servant, or that of the principal for the conduct of his agent, is founded on the superintendence and control which the master is supposed to exercise over his servant, or the principal over his agent. 1 Blackstone Comm. 431. By the civil law, that liability was confined to the person standing in the relation of pater familias to the person doing the injury. And although by the common law the rule of liability has been extended to cases where the agent is not a mere domestic, yet the principle and the reason upon which it rests is the same. This rule of respondet superior, as its terms import, arises out of the relation of superior and subordinate, is applicable to that relation wherever it exists, whether between principal and agent or master and servant, and is coextensive with it, and ceases where the relation itself ceases to exist. It is founded on the power of control and direction which the superior has a right to exercise, and which for the safety of other persons he is bound to exercise, over the acts of his subordinates, and in strict analogy to the liability ex contractu, upon the maxim qui facit per alium facit per se. The direct coincidence and coexistence of the rule of respondet superior with the relation to which it belongs is an unvarying test of its application. Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590; Quarman v. Burnett, 4 Jur. 969, 9 L. J. Exch. 308, 6 M. & W. 497.

Statutes.—In Georgia the statute fixing the liability applies only to injuries connected with the performance of the servant's duty. Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Christian, liable for acts committed outside the scope of his employment,⁵³ although intended to promote the master's interests.⁵⁴ The test is not the character of the act,⁵⁵ nor whether it was done during the existence of the servant's employment;⁵⁶ but whether the injury complained of was committed by the authority of the master expressly conferred or fairly implied in the nature of the employment and the duties incident to it.⁵⁷ The master's liability is not limited to cases where he is present and remains passive,⁵⁸ nor to cases where the act is without his knowledge or express authority.⁵⁹ On the other hand the master is not liable for any act of his servant which he would not have been liable for if he had done it himself.⁶⁰ The difficult question in all cases is whether the particular act was really within the scope of the servant's employment.⁶¹

(II) EXCEPTIONS TO RULE. There are certain exceptions to the rule confining

97 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 411. In Louisiana the civil code confines the responsibility of masters to damages occasioned by their servants "in the exercise of the functions in which they are employed;" and they are not liable for collateral torts committed by servants while attending to the duties of their employment. Vara v. R. M. Quigley Constr. Co., 114 La. 261, 38 So. 162.

Acts outside scope of authority.—Contrary to the general rule, it has been held that where an employee of the owners of a building opened a coal-hole in the sidewalk and left it unprotected, and plaintiff was injured by falling into it, the master is liable for injuries sustained, although such employee acted beyond the scope of his authority. *King v. a master's liability to acts of the servant within the scope of his employment and in the line of his duties. For instance railroad companies have been held responsible for assaults committed by their servants upon passengers, upon the ground that they undertook an additional duty involving the utmost care and good faith, the master's liability being placed on the ground of public policy, it being more reasonable that the master, who has placed his servant in a position of trust than the irresponsible stranger, should suffer.⁶² By like reasoning it has been held that a shop-keeper is liable for the acts of his servants toward a customer in the store, even though such acts are not committed within the strict line of employment.⁶³ So where a servant is employed to guard the property of a third person, and he steals some of the property, the master has been held liable, although the act was outside the scope of his employment.⁶⁴ So the rule as to injuries from dangerous appliances intrusted to the care of the servant⁶⁵ may perhaps be said to be an exception to the general rule.⁶⁶

b. Wilful or Malicious Acts of Servant. The earlier cases held that the master was not liable for the wilful or malicious acts of his servant, as distinguished from his neglect, unless the act was done pursuant to the master's express orders or with his assent, notwithstanding it was done in the line of the servant's duties.⁶⁷

E. 990] (holding that allowing servants to snap pins at objects and persons in a store was negligence for which a storekeeper was liable to a customer who was injured thereby); Mallach v. Ridley, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 922, 24 Abb. N. Cas. 172.

Contrary rule.—"It is true that customers in such case are upon the premises by invitation, and the merchant owes the positive duty to the customer of using ordinary care to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition for use by the customer in the usual way; and this doubtless includes the duty of using ordinary care to employ competent and law-abiding servants, but we do not understand that he insures the customer's personal safety. . . . The general principle as frequently stated is that persons who come upon premises to do business with the occupant at his express or implied request are there by invitation, and that they are entitled to the same treatment due to all invited persons, namely, the exercise of ordinary care by the occupant." Cobb v. Simon, 119 Wis. 597, 604, 97 N. W. 276, 100 Am. St. Rep. 909. And see Hupfer v. National Distilling Co., 114 Wis. 279, 90 N. W. 191.

Blacksmith.—The proprietor of a blacksmith shop is liable for the negligence and unskillfulness of his servants whom he left in charge of his shop, and who were intrusted by plaintiff, in the proprietor's absence, with the task of shoeing his horse, although they were not employed for the purpose of shoeing horses. Finding them in charge and at work, plaintiff had a right to assume that they had authority and sufficient skill. Leviness v. Post, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 321.

It is now well settled, however, that the master is liable for the wilful or malicious acts of his servant where they are done in the course of his employment and within its scope.⁶⁸ On the other hand, where the servant does a wilful or malicious act while engaged in his master's work, but outside of his authority, as where he steps aside from his employment to gratify some personal animosity or to accomplish some purpose of his own, the master is generally not liable.⁶⁹ If a third person is injured by the act of a servant done in the course of his employ-

Discharge of fireworks.—One is liable for personal injuries caused by the negligent discharge of fireworks by his servants. Colvin v. Peabody, 155 Mass. 104, 29 N. E. 59.

Leaving trap-door or coal-hole open.—Where a servant, whose work requires him to open a trap-door or coal-hole, or like contrivance, fails to close it, the master is liable for injuries resulting to third persons therefrom. Ray v. Jones, etc., Co., 92 Minn. 101, 99 N. W. 782; Todd v. Havlin, 72 Mo. App. 565. And see infra, V, A, 4, a.

Contagious disease.—Where a person, in purchasing a ticket at a railroad station, contracts a contagious disease from the ticket agent, the railroad company is not liable in damages, unless it be shown that it, or its superior officers, knew that the agent had the disease. Long v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 48 Kan. 28, 28 Pac. 977, 30 Am. St. Rep. 271, 15 L. R. A. 319. Compare Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Freeman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 73 S. W. 542.

Ground of liability.—The liability of a master arising out of an act of negligence committed by his servant does not rest upon the ground that the master himself was negligent, but upon considerations of public policy, which hold him responsible for the acts of his servants when acting about his business. Helms v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 120 Fed. 389.

Medical examiner of accident insurance company.—Where one insured under an accident policy has sprained his foot, requiring a plaster cast thereon until the injured ligaments heal, and the agent of the insurer, in making an examination, removes and fails to replace such cast, and an injury results, he is guilty of negligence for which the insurer is liable. Tompkins v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 479, 44 S. E. 439, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1006, 62 L. R. A. 489. Physician as independent contractor see infra, V, B, 1, b.

Negligence not within scope.—A master is not responsible to one injured by the unauthorized and forbidden conduct of his employees not within the scope of their employment, unless after knowledge thereof he was himself guilty of some misconduct. Healy v. Patterson, 123 Iowa 73, 98 N. W. 576. Where a servant acts under the special orders of his master, the master is not liable for his negligence in doing business outside of the scope of his employment. Wilson v. Peverly, 2 N. H. 548. A master is not answerable for the negligence of his servant in doing something the master has not ordered done, if he has not authorized the servant to exercise his discretion in determining what to do. ant done under the master's instructions or approved by the master during the service.⁷⁹ It is immaterial that the master was not present at the time,⁸⁰ that he had no actual notice of the omission constituting the servant's negligence,⁸¹ that he had delegated to a third person the power to give the servant instructions as to his work,⁸² or that the servant acted without the knowledge or contrary to the wishes of his master.⁸³ The general rule is that the liability of the master for the negligence of his servant is not affected by the fact that he exercised all possible care in the selection of the servant,⁸⁴ although the rule is otherwise, where it is sought to make the master liable for the acts or omissions from want of skill by one employed by him in some independent work,⁸⁵ or where the master is sued by one servant for the negligence of a fellow servant.⁸⁶ Plaintiff cannot recover, although defendant's servant was negligent in the scope of his employment, if plaintiff himself was guilty of contributory negligence.⁸⁷ But the concurrent negligence of a third person is not a defense⁸⁸ any more than if the master himself was the person alleged to be guilty of negligence.⁸⁹

(II) OTHER TORTS. In respect of other torts committed by the servant there can be no question but that the master is liable, at the present day, for an assault,⁹⁰

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 1227.

Application of rule.—If a servant causes a runaway by his own negligence and runs against a cart intentionally and with a view to the best interests of his employer, the master is not exempt from liability because the servant ran against the cart of the third person to save himself from greater peril, if it was also for his master's interest. And even though the horses ran away without any negligence of the servant, the owner is liable if the servant caused the injury by running against the wagon, although he ran against it solely with a view to his own personal safety, provided the act was a prudent one by which to stop the horses. Wolfe v. Mersereau, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 473.

Third person driving.—In an action for damages for injuries resulting from negligence of a servant in driving a cart, the employer is liable, although the servant was not driving at the time of the accident, but had surrendered the reins to a person riding with him, and who was not in the service of defendant. Booth v. Mister, 7 C. & P. 66, 32 E. C. L. 502.

Want of negligence.—Of course the owner is not liable where the horses ran away without any negligence on the part of the driver. Steudle v. Rentchler, 64 Ill. 161.

Statutes.—A master is not liable, under Mass. Rev. St. c. 51, § 3, for the damages sustained by any party by reason of the omission of his servant seasonably to drive the master's vehicle to the right of the middle of the traveled part of a road when meeting another vehicle. not liable for such torts of the servant where the act is not within the scope of his employment.⁹⁶

4. ACTS WITHIN SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT—a. General Rules. In determining whether a master is liable for the torts of his servants the most difficult question is whether the particular act or omission of the servant causing the injury for which the master is sought to be held liable was committed within the scope of the servant's employment; and this question is in most cases one of fact to be determined by the jury from the surrounding facts and circumstances.⁹⁷ The terms "course of employment" and "scope of the authority" are not susceptible of accurate definition.⁹⁸ What acts are within the scope of the employment can be determined by no fixed rule,⁹⁹ the authority from the master generally being

Assault and battery.—Curtis v. Dinneen, 4 Dak. 245, 30 N. W. 148; Mogk v. Chicago City R. Co., 80 Ill. App. 411 (holding that a trespass committed by a servant merely to prevent an annoyance to himself is not an act for which the master is liable); Coffield v. McCabe, 58 Minn. 218, 59 N. W. 1005; Weiler v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 29 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 347; Sekator v. Lannon, 26 R. I. 125, 58 Atl. 456.

Malicious prosecution.—A master is not liable for a malicious prosecution instigated by his servant, in the absence of evidence that the master was personally concerned in the prosecution, or of evidence of the nature and scope of the servant's employment sufficient to warrant an inference of the servant's authorization by the master to instigate the prosecution. Staton v. Mason, 106 N. Y. App. Div. 26, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 417. See, generally, MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, ante p. 1, et seq.

Mixing water with milk.—Where a servant employed to deliver milk to a factory mixed it with filthy water to gratify his malice toward his employer, and then delivered the milk, it was held that the tort was committed within the scope of his employment. Stranahan Bros. Catering Co. v. Coit, 55 Ohio St. 398, 45 N. E. 634, 4 L. R. A. N. S. 506.

Use of different means of conveyance.—Where a servant is not shown to have been authorized to use a wagon, he having previously used a push-cart in the business, the master is not liable for injuries inflicted on a third person by the use of such wagon. Wilson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 63 N. J. L. 385, 43 Atl. 894. And where a servant was sent on an errand, and without the consent or knowledge of the master wrongfully took possession of a horse and buggy and therewith ran plaintiff down, the master was not liable. Stretton v. Toronto, 13 Ont. 139.

The closing of a trap-door or coal-hole, or the like, where the servant's duties required him to open it to perform his work, is considered to be within the scope of his employment. Burt v. Wrigley, 43 Ill. App. 367; Ray v. Jones, etc., Co., 92 Minn. 101, 99 N. W. 782; Todd v. Havlin, 72 Mo. App. 565; Pomerens Co. v. White, 70 Nebr. 171,

Setting up goods sold.—Where machinery or hardware is sold under an agreement whereby the seller is to set it up, the acts of the servant in setting it up in a defective manner (Crandall v. Boutell, 95 Minn. 114, 103 N. W. 890; Wrought-Iron Range Co. v. Graham, 80 Fed. 474, 25 C. C. A. 570), or testing it to discover defects after it was set up (Wright Steam Engine Works v. Lawrence Cement Co., 167 N. Y. 440, 60 N. E. 739), are within the scope of his employment.

Persons employed in different branches of work.—Where servants engaged in running a steamboat used to carry persons to a railway, both steamboat and railway being owned by the same person, mismanaged the railway so as to cause injuries to third persons, nothing being shown as to any authority or right on their part to operate the railway, the act was not within the scope of their employment. Biederman v. Brown, 49 Ill. App. 483.

Where one went to an express office to obtain an overcharge paid by him, and the agent maltreated him because he had demanded and received the overcharge, the act was considered to be so within the scope of the agent's employment as to render the express company liable therefor. Richberger v. American Express Co., 73 Miss. 161, 18 So. 922, 55 Am. St. Rep. 522, 31 L. R. A. 390. But see Bowen v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 136 Fed. 306, 69 C. C. A. 444, 70 L. R. A. 915.

plained of would not have been committed without the facilities afforded by the servant's relations to his master,⁶ nor because the servant supposed that he possessed authority to do the act in question.⁷ On the other hand the act may be within the scope of the employment, although it is not necessary for the proper performance of the servant's duty to his master,⁸ or although it was not done in the interest and business of the master.⁹ An act cannot be said to be within the scope of the employment where the master himself, if present, would have no authority to do the act;¹⁰ but this rule does not prevent the holding of the master liable for the wrongful or excessive exercise of the servant's discretion in a case where the act done would have been lawful if the supposed circumstances had been real.¹¹

b. Violations of Instructions or Orders. The fact that a servant, while engaged in the business of his master, deviates from the master's instructions does not of itself make the act outside of the scope of the servant's employment so as to absolve the master from liability.¹² Likewise a particular act of a servant may be within the scope of his employment, although it violates the express instructions or orders of the master.¹³

c. Act of Servant in His Own Behalf—(i) GENERAL RULES. The act of a servant done to effect some independent purpose of his own, and not with reference to the service in which he is employed, or while he is acting as his own master for the time being, is ordinarily held not to be within the scope of his employment so as to render the master liable therefor.¹⁴ If the injury occurs at such a time it is immaterial that the facilities afforded to the servant by his relation to the master were used in committing the injury, if such facilities were not used with the authority or consent of the master.¹⁵ However, a mere deviation by the servant from the direct and usual route does not constitute such a turning aside from pursuing the business of his employment as to absolve the master from liability.¹⁶ On the other hand if a servant, such as a driver, turns wholly aside

Dinsmore, 12 Hun 465, holding that a recovery against the master cannot be had where the servant, a truck driver in defendant's employment, ran over a person while away from his proper course; having gone, at the request of a third person, a friend of his own, to deliver a trunk, unconnected with defendant's business.

Effort to resume accustomed place of service.—Where the servant has departed from his route for personal purposes, even if the master's liability is suspended while the servant has deviated from the route for his own purpose, it reattaches when the servant has resumed the prosecution of the master's business by starting to return. Geraty v. National Ice Co., 16 N. Y. App. Div. 174, 44 from the master's employment and goes on an independent journey, wholly foreign to his employment, for a purpose exclusively his own, the master is not liable for his acts during such time.¹⁷ For instance, if the servant takes out the master's horse or team,¹⁸ automobile,¹⁹ or hand-car,²⁰ for his own pleasure or purposes, when not acting for the master, or after he has been ordered to put them in the stable, the master is not liable for injuries received by third persons while the servant is thus acting for himself. So if the act occurs while the servant was off duty for the day,²¹ or after quitting for the day,²² and the act is not in further-

It is immaterial that the act occurred at a place to which the servant's duty did not necessarily call him, if the act, if continued to its completion, would have furthered the master's business and been within the scope of the servant's employment. Geraty v. National Ice Co., 16 N. Y. App. Div. 174, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 659.

Absence of specific orders as to mode of dealing with vehicle.—A distinction has been drawn between an employment where a vehicle is intrusted to a servant to be used entirely in his discretion, and an employment where the servant has specific orders as to the mode of dealing with the vehicle. For instance, it has been held that where the owner of an express wagon intrusted it to a servant with authority to secure such business as he could, and the servant deviated from his route to get a load of poles for himself, and while taking them home negligently ran over a child, the owner was liable for such injuries, although the servant was carrying his own property. Mulvehill v. Bates, 31 Minn. 364, 17 N. W. 959, 47 Am. Rep. 796. And see Venables v. Smith, 2 Q. B. D. 279, 46 L. J. Q. B. 470, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 509, 25 Wkly. Rep. 584.

Combination of master's and servant's business.—If the usage of the parties, under the servant's contract of hiring, was of such a character that it allowed the servant to attend to his duties on such terms as suited his convenience, and at the time of the commission of the tort he was engaged in his own private business, but at the same time was pursuing defendant's business in the service for which he was employed, defendant would still be liable. Rahn v. Singer Mfg. Co., 26 Fed. 912.

Use of hand-car.—In a recent case in which the distinction between deviating and turning away is thoroughly discussed, and where the authorities are reviewed at length, it was held that where an employee was allowed to use a railroad tricycle to gather fuel, and he went to a certain point in search of it, but deviated from his purpose of gathering the same so far as to carry a sick friend to a station beyond, and on returning from the station negligently struck plaintiff before reaching the point at which he had originally taken up his sick friend and deviated from his employment, the employee had resumed the duties of his employment so that the master was liable for the accident. Barmore v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., 85 Miss. 426, 38 So. 210, 70 L. R. A. 627.

(ii) MISCHIEVOUS ACTS FOR PLEASURE OF SERVANT. If the servant does an act merely to frighten a third person or animal,²³ or to perpetrate a joke on a third person,²⁴ and the act is entirely disconnected with the purpose of the employment, the master is generally not liable. This rule is limited, however, in some states by the "dangerous appliances" theory, that is, that a servant cannot depart from the duty intrusted to him when that duty regards the rights of others in respect to the employment of dangerous implements by the master in the prosecution of his business without making the master liable for the consequences.²⁵ The act of a servant in charge of an engine in blowing off steam or whistling, even where purely mischievous or malicious, has been held within the scope of his employment.²⁶ So where a servant in charge of torpedoes in use by the master negligently uses them,²⁷ or uses them for his own amusement or to play a joke,²⁸ the master is liable for injuries inflicted thereby. The departure of a servant from the employment of a master is to be distinguished from his departure from or neglect of a duty connected with that employment; the servant may depart from his employment without making his master liable for his negligence when outside the employment of the master. But he cannot depart from a duty intrusted to him when that duty regards the rights of others in respect to the employment of dangerous instruments by the master in the prosecution of his business without making the master liable for the consequences. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Shields, 47 Ohio St. 387, 24 N. E. 658, 21 Am. St. Rep. 840, 8 L. R. A. 464.

What are dangerous appliances.—A hand-car has been held not a dangerous appliance (Branch v. International, etc., R. Co., 92 Tex. 288, 47 S. W. 974, 71 Am. St. Rep. 844), although the contrary has also been held (Barmore v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., 85 Miss. 426, 450, 38 So. 210, 70 L. R. A. 627). In the latter case the court said: "The absolute duty of the master, which cannot be delegated, in reference to the degree of care demanded in the custody, control, and operation of dangerous instrumentalities, applies not to those alone which are operated or propelled by the power of steam, electricity, powder, dynamite, or kindred forces, but to all instrumentalities employed by the master which, by reason of the method of their operation, are capable of, and liable to, inflict serious injury to others. The motive power is not the sole consideration in determining whether an instrumentality falls within the general classification of 'dangerous agencies and appliances.' An attempt has been made, in a very few illogically reasoned cases, to draw a distinction between instrumentalities 'dangerous in themselves' and those 'dangerous by reason of improper use,' and confine the master's liability to cases due to mismanagement of the former class alone. An analysis will show that the distinction is more imaginary than real, and too refined to be of any practical benefit as a method of determining legal responsibility."

track for his own amusement,³⁰ the master is not liable, except possibly in those states where the "dangerous appliances" doctrine is fully accepted.³¹

d. Particular Acts—(i) SETTING FIRES. The building of a fire in connection with the destruction of rubbish or the clearing of land, or other like work, is usually considered as within the scope of the servant's employment so as to make the master liable for damages resulting therefrom.³² The master is not liable, however, where the fire is kindled merely to serve a purpose of the servant, having no connection with the master's work.³³

(ii) INVITATION TO GO ON PREMISES OR TO RIDE. An employer is not bound by the act of his servant in inviting or permitting children to be on the premises.³⁴ On the other hand it is within the apparent authority of a clerk to invite a customer into that part of the store where the material the customer desires the purchase is kept.³⁵ But it is not within the scope of the employment where a servant directs a stranger to use a passageway not usually used, where the person injured is a stranger who has gone on the premises merely to accommodate the servant.³⁶ The servant generally has no implied authority to invite a third person, to whom the master owes no duty, to ride on a horse, wagon, or car in charge of the servant.³⁷

(iii) ASSAULT AND BATTERY—(A) In General.³⁸ While an assault by a servant may be within the scope of the employment so as to render the master liable,³⁹ an assault by a servant not committed as a means or for the purpose of performing the work which he was employed to do is ordinarily not within the scope of his employment, and the master is not liable therefor;⁴⁰ as where a servant, not engaged as a watchman or guard, throws a stone or other object at a child annoying him.⁴¹ And this rule applies to servants of railroad companies,⁴² where the person injured is not a passenger,⁴³ so as to render the railroad company not liable where the servant injures third persons by throwing from the car his own property or property in his custody not intrusted to the railroad company as a carrier,⁴⁴ or where he throws a stone or other object at persons near the right of way.⁴⁵ If the master owes a duty to the person injured,⁴⁶ as where the latter is a passenger,⁴⁷ the master is generally liable without regard to the express or implied authority of the servant to commit the assault. Assault to collect money.—An assault committed by a servant, whose duty it was to collect for property sold at the time of the sale, for the purpose of compelling him to pay, is within the scope of the servant's employment. Bergman v. Hendrickson, 106 Wis. 434, 82 N. W. 304, 80 Am. St. Rep. 47. It has been held, however, that a lock-keeper on a canal is not authorized to assault a person not paying toll. *Ware v. even though the servant goes beyond the necessity of the situation and uses more force than necessary.⁴⁹ For instance the authority to use force is ordinarily implied where the employee is a watchman⁵⁰ or doorkeeper.⁵¹

(B) Shooting. If a servant shoots a third person, the act is ordinarily not within the scope of his employment, especially where he is not a watchman or detective, or the like.⁵² And the mere employment of a watchman to guard property and keep away trespassers does not involve authority to shoot trespassers;⁵³ and if he shoots a third person, to whom the master owes no duty, without provocation, no attempt to trespass having been made,⁵⁴ or shoots a trespasser who is retreating,⁵⁵ the act is not within the scope of the servant's employment, so as to make the master liable. On the other hand a master is liable where a third person is shot by his servant, who is authorized to make arrests, in connection with making the arrest,⁵⁶ or where the master asks his servant to assist him by fighting an adversary, all being armed.⁵⁷

(iv) ARREST AND FALSE IMPRISONMENT.⁵⁸ The arrest, or arrest and imprisonment, of a third person, where done to protect the business of the master, may be within the scope of the authority of a servant, so as to make the master liable therefor.⁵⁹ For instance, such power may be impliedly vested in a floor-

N. Y. Suppl. 284), or where the servant did not demand immediate payment on delivery, but made the assault next day, the failure to collect making the servant personally liable (McDermott v. American Brewing Co., 105 La. 124, 29 So. 498, 83 Am. St. Rep. 225, 52 L. R. A. 684), the master is not liable.

Retaking property.—A servant sent to retake property is impliedly authorized to use force to recover it, so as to make the master liable for assault in connection with its recovery. Peddle v. Gally, 109 N. Y. App. Div. 178, 95 N. Y. Suppl. 652; O'Connell v. Samuel, 81 Hun (N. Y.) 357, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 889; Griffith v. Friendly, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 393, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 391.

walker,⁶⁰ a salesman in charge of the master's store,⁶¹ a watchman,⁶² or a detective;⁶³ but one employed as a detective, nothing being shown as to his authority, is not necessarily authorized to arrest and imprison a third person.⁶⁴ The authority may be implied when the arrest is made by the servant in the absence of the master for the protection of property that is in danger, and in some cases it has been inferred when the arrest was to recover the property back, or where the crime was at the time being perpetrated.⁶⁵ Of course, if the arrest is caused by a servant having nothing to do with the matters in relation to which the arrest is made, or is not for the purpose of protecting the employer's property, the master is not liable.⁶⁶ The master is ordinarily not liable when the arrest is made after the supposed crime has been committed,⁶⁷ nor where the object of the arrest is the punishment of the offense, rather than the protection of the property.⁶⁸

Arrest to get third person out of way.—

The act of a servant of a telephone company in causing a landowner to be unlawfully arrested for the purpose of putting him out of the way, so that the company's agents and servants might erect poles on his land, is an act done in the course of the company's employment and in furtherance of its business, and for such the company is liable in damages. A doorkeeper instructed to admit only persons with tickets has no implied authority to direct the arrest of one attempting to enter without a ticket. Barabasz v. Kabat, 86 Md. 23, 37 Atl. 720.

Accountant.—It is not within the scope of the authority of a clerk employed to keep accounts, to collect and pay bills, and to purchase and sell supplies, to cause the arrest of persons who left the employment of the master while the latter was absent, and while indebted to him. Vara v. R. M. Quigley Constr. Co., 114 La. 261, 38 So. 162.

Arrest in connection with assault.—It has been held that if the arrest is in connection with the assault, and the assault was within the scope of the employment, it is immaterial whether the arrest was within the servant's authority, where the master is sued both for assault and false imprisonment. Presumptions.—It has been held in England that it will be presumed where a servant, not specially appointed to protect property, arrests a person whom he supposes to have stolen his master's goods, that he acted in pursuance of his duty as a good citizen and not in the scope of his employment as a servant. Edwards v. London, etc., R. Co., L. R. 5 C. P. 445, 39 L. J. C. P. 241, 22 L. T.

(v) MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.⁶⁹ A servant authorized to cause an arrest in certain instances has authority to prefer a criminal charge against the person arrested, so as to render the master liable, in an action for malicious prosecution where the arrest was within the scope of the servant's employment.⁷⁰ Generally, however, the duty of superintendence does not carry with it an implied authority to either arrest or prosecute.⁷¹ A credit clerk has not, by virtue of his position alone, implied authority to criminally prosecute any one for an offense committed against his master, so as to render the latter liable in case the prosecution is instituted maliciously.⁷²

(vi) TRESPASS.⁷³ It often happens that the duties of a servant are such that the commission of a trespass upon the property of another may be within the scope of his employment,⁷⁴ as where the servant is authorized to search for property,⁷⁵ or to cut trees interfering with poles belonging to the master.⁷⁶

(vii) CONVERSION.⁷⁷ The conversion of the property of a third person may be within the scope of the employment of the servant,⁷⁸ as where the servant obeys a command to remove such property as is pointed out by another.⁷⁹ So, where a servant is employed to drive a team, the taking of the hay of a third person to feed them has been held to be within the line of his employment.⁸⁰

Placing powder on land of another.—The act of a servant having the custody of powder, in placing it in plaintiff's blacksmith shop to preserve it from rain until the next day, when it exploded, was within the scope of his duty, where the act was done with the bona fide purpose of preserving the powder and furthering the interest of his master. *Birmingham Water-Works Co. v. Cutting timber on land of another.—A servant who is ordered to cut trees acts within the scope of his employment where he cuts trees on the land of another by mistake (Smith v. Webster, 23 Mich. 298), or even where the cutting is the result of his negligence or wilfulness (Luttrell v. Hazen, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 20). Especially is the master liable where he neglected to employ a competent person to superintend the work, or to instruct the servants so they could distinguish boundaries of his land. *Carman v. Conversion.—A servant may be sued by a third person for conversion, although the act was innocent and for the benefit of his master, without regard to whether it was done

The earlier cases which are still adhered to in many jurisdictions limited the servant's liability to his acts of misfeasance as distinguished from non-feasance,⁸² but this distinction has been repudiated in some states and the servant held liable for acts of non-feasance as well as misfeasance.⁸³ At any event, no action can be maintained against a servant unless he can be considered a wrong-doer;⁸⁴ and where the servant obeys the commands of his master without negligence on his part, he is not liable for injuries to third persons unless he knew, or had reason to believe, that the act or acts were hazardous and liable to occasion injury to some third person.⁸⁵

b. To Co-Servant. A servant is liable to a co-servant for injuries received by the latter because of the negligent or wrongful act of the former,⁸⁶ although the liability is generally limited to injuries caused by the misfeasance as distinguished from the non-feasance of the servant.⁸⁷ The liability exists notwithstanding the master has incurred no liability to the injured servant.⁸⁸ Subject to the rule in some states that the servant is not liable for acts of non-feasance,⁸⁹ the servant may be liable where the injury was received from defects in the place of work, tools, or machinery, if he was responsible therefor;⁹⁰ but not where the servant is not responsible therefor.⁹¹

An employee who selects the means and directs the mode of setting up apparatus furnished by the employer, becomes personally liable to a co-employee injured by his negligence in so doing, although the work was satisfactory to the employer, since the fact that the employer approves the employee's conduct without directing it does not defeat the employee's liability to a co-employee for negligence. c. To Master.⁹² A servant is liable to his master for damages which the master has been compelled to pay to third persons because of the negligent or other wrongful act of the servant, where the master is not himself in fault.⁹³ He is also liable for the amount voluntarily paid by the master to the third person because of the acts of the servant, provided it is not in excess of the sum for which the master was legally liable.⁹⁴ It is no defense, where the servant was negligent, that other persons were also culpable.⁹⁵

6. JOINT LIABILITY OF MASTER AND SERVANT.⁹⁶ Although there are authorities to the contrary,⁹⁷ the better rule and the one supported by the weight of authority is that where the master is liable for the negligent or wrongful act of his servant solely upon the ground of the relationship between them, under the doctrine of respondeat superior, and not by reason of any personal share in the negligent or wrongful act, by his presence or express direction, he is not liable jointly with the servant, and a joint action cannot be brought against them.⁹⁸ At any event the master and servant cannot be joined where the act of the servant was wilful.⁹⁹

7. CRIMINAL AND PENAL RESPONSIBILITIES.¹ A servant who does an unlawful act which would subject him to imprisonment or liability for a penalty if he was acting in his own behalf is generally personally liable therefor.² The master is not

For instance a superior servant is not liable to a co-servant for injuries received by the latter because of the master's failure to provide safe and suitable machinery, although it was the superior servant's duty to look after the condition of the machinery. *Cincinnati, etc., R. Trespass.—A joint action of tort, in the nature of trespass, may be maintained against a corporation and its servant, for a personal injury inflicted by the latter in discharging the duties imposed on him by the corporation, and excluding plaintiff from the depot of the corporation, although they might have been equally well discharged without the use of undue or illegal force. *Hewett v. criminally liable for the acts of his servant unless committed by his command or with his assent.³ But where a master, owing a duty to the public, intrusts its performance to a servant, he is responsible criminally for the failure of his servant to discharge that duty if its non-performance is a crime.⁴ A statutory penalty cannot be recovered from the master because of the acts or omissions of his servant, where not authorized by the master,⁵ except where the facts are sufficient to authorize a presumption that the acts of the servant were done under a general authority from the master.⁶

8. INDEMNITY TO SERVANT. It is well settled that there can be no indemnity among joint wrong-doers.⁷ It would seem, however, that if the servant is compelled to pay damages for injuries to a third person not caused by his negligence or wilful and wrongful act except as directed by his master, he may recover over from his employer.⁸ An agreement by the master to indemnify the servant against liability for his act may be valid,⁹ where the object is apparently in the furtherance of justice, and in the exercise of a right, and the means are not in themselves criminal, and not known by the servant to be wrongful.¹⁰

Participation in fraud.—A clerk who knowingly assists in the fraudulent practices of his principal is as much a party to the fraud as the principal himself. U. S. v. Flemming, 18 Fed. 907.

Relation of master and servant.—To constitute the relation of master and servant between an employer and an employee, so as to render the former liable to indemnify the latter for damages to which he has been subjected on account of injuries committed by him while using ordinary care in the employer's business, the employee must be acting at the time strictly in the place of the employer, in accordance with and representing the employer's will, and not his own, and the business must be strictly that of the employer, and not in any respect the employee's. Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63.

9. See, generally, INDEMNITY, 22 Cyc. 83.

A contract to furnish bail if the servant is arrested is valid. Where a railroad company employed a detective, agreeing to furnish him bail in case of arrest in the performance of his duties, and to pay the expenses of his defense, and he was arrested and tried for being concerned in lynching a man whom he had caused to be arrested for wrecking a train, it was held that the detective's arrest was not the proximate result of the service so as to bind the master. Hew-

Independent nature of employee's business.—The mere fact that the employee is one who carries on a separate and independent employment does not make him an independent contractor. Brackett v. Lubke, 4 Allen (Mass.) 138, 81 Am. Dec. 694; Sadler v. Henlock, 3 C. L. R. 760, 4 E. & B. 570, 1 Jur. N. S. 677, 24 L. J. Q. B. 138, 3 Wkly. Rep. 181, 82 E. C. L. 570. On the other hand, while the definitions of an independent contractor usually refer to one "exercising an independent employment," and generally to an independent contractor having a business of his own, no case has been found where a person who would otherwise be an independent contractor has been held not one because he, through the employment, is not engaged in any independent business. There are cases, however, where the fact of the employee having an independent business has been especially referred to to support the contention that he was an independent contractor. McCarthy v. Portland Second Parish, 71 Me. 318, 36 Am. Rep. 320; De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368; Milligan v. Wedge, 12 A. & E. 737, 10 L. J. Q. B. 19, 4 P. & D. 714, 40 E. C. L. 366; Laugher v. Pointer, 5 B. & C.

tracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods, and without being subject to the control of his employer as to the means by which the result is to be accomplished, but only as to the result of the work.¹³ Generally the circumstances which go to show one to be an independent contractor, while separately they may not be conclusive, are the independent nature of his business, the existence of a contract for the performance of a specified piece of work, the agreement to pay a fixed price for the work, the employment of assistants by the employee who are under his control, the furnishing by him of the necessary materials, and his right to control the work while it is in progress except as to results.¹⁴

b. Right to Control. The test of the relationship is the right to control.¹⁵ It is not the fact of actual interference with the control but the right to interfere that makes the difference between an independent contractor and a servant or agent.¹⁶ To enlarge the test is whether the employee represents his employer as

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 1242 et seq.

Fixing of price and specifications.—Where one contracts to do certain work for another the fact that no price was fixed and no specifications made as to the work to be done does not render the contract one of mere hire and service. Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 4 N. E. 755, 54 Am. Rep. 703. And see Galatia Coal Co. v. Harris, 116 Ill. App. 70.

Result as distinguished from service.—"We think that the word 'result,' as so used, means a production or product of some sort, and not a service. One may contract to produce a house, a ship, or a locomotive; and such house, or ship, or locomotive produced is the 'result.' Such 'results' produced are often, and probably generally, by independent contractors. But we do not think that plowing a field, mowing a lawn, driving a carriage, or a horse-car, for one trip or for many trips a day, is a 'result' in the sense that the word is used in the rule. Such acts do not result in a product. They are simply a service." Jensen v. Barbour, 15 Mont. 582, 593, 39 Pac. 906.

Identity of employing and contracting company.—The fact that the employing company and the contracting company were controlled and managed by the same person has been considered sufficient to authorize a recovery against the employing company. Chicago Economic Fuel Gas Co. v. Myers, 168 Ill. 139, 48 N. E. 66. See also James McNeil, etc., Co. v. Crucible Steel Co., 207 Pa. St. 493, 56 Atl. 1067.

Estoppel to deny relationship.—The mere fact that an employee had reason to believe, from the acts and conduct of the owner, that the one employing him was simply the servant of the owner will not estop the owner from denying such relation of master and servant and relying on the rule applicable to independent contractors. Johnson v. Owen, 33 Iowa 512, rule applicable as between contractor and subcontractor. See also Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427, 26 Pac. 834.

to the result of the work only or as to the means as well as the result.¹⁷ If the employee is merely subject to the control or direction of the owner or his agent as to the result to be obtained, he is an independent contractor.¹⁸ If the employee is subject to the control of the employer as to the means, he is not an independent contractor.¹⁹ But even where an employer retains control over the mode and manner of doing a specified portion of the work, and an injury results to a third person from the doing of other portions of the work, he is not liable.²⁰ Subject to these rules, the following have been held to be independent contractors: Persons engaged in construction work in general;²¹ persons who undertake the construction of an entire building or specific portions thereof;²² persons engaged to make repairs or improvements on a building;²³ architects who merely draw up

"Under the supervision and subject to the approval."—A provision that the work is to be done "under the supervision and subject to the approval" of the employer or his agent does not affect the independent nature of the contract. Alabama Midland R. Co. v. Martin, 100 Ala. 511, 14 So. 401; Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017; Eaton v. European, etc., R. Co., 59 Me. 520, 8 Am. Rep. 430; Vosbeck v. Kellogg, 78 Minn. 176, 80 N. W. 957; Thomas v. Altoona, etc., Electric R. Co., 191 Pa. St. 361, 43 Atl. 215; Casement v. Brown, 148 U. S. 615, 13 S. Ct. 672, 37 L. ed. 582. A requirement that the work shall be executed under the supervision of an engineer, and authorizing him to prescribe the "order" in which the materials should be placed, and to "give the lines and levels" to be used, does not make the contractor a servant. Callan v. Bull, supra.

Performance "to satisfaction" of employer's representative.—The fact that the contract stipulates that the work is to be done "to the satisfaction" of the employer's representative, is not such an assumption of the right to control as to the details or methods of doing the work as to make the employer responsible for the acts of the contractor. Eldred v. Mackie, 178 Mass. 1, 59 N. E. 673; Kelly v. New York, 11 N. Y. 432; Powell v. Virginia Constr. Co., 88 Tenn. 692, 13 S. W. 691, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925; Smith v. Milwaukee Builders', etc., Exch., 91 Wis. 360, 64 N. W. 1041, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912, 30 L. R. A. 504.

Right to reject improper or defective materials.—The independent nature of the contract is not affected by a provision that the employer or his agent is to have the right to reject improper or defective materials. Norwalk Gaslight Co. v. Norwalk, 63 Conn. 495, 28 Atl. 32; Fitzpatrick v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 31 Ill. App. 649; Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council, [1896] 1 Q. B. 335, 60 J. P. 196, 65 L. J. Q. B. 363, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 69, 44 Wkly. Rep. 323.

Illustrations of reservation of something more than right to supervise.—Under a written contract to demolish a building, containing a clause that the "work of demolition is to be carried out according to the directions of the supervising architect, whose decisions on all points . . . I agree to accept as final," such control over the work was reversed as prevented the contractor from being independent, and created the relation of master and servant. Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1011, 3 So. 363, 4 Am. St. Rep. 256. Where a railroad company was the employer, and reserved the right to determine the extent of the excavation to be made, and undertook to furnish a locomotive and train crew and transport the material removed, the contractor was held not an independent contractor. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Tow, 63 S. W. 27, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 408, 66 L. R. A. 941. Where the contractor agreed to put in posts in building a walk as the employer company should require, and he was to submit to the supervision and direction of the company's engineer and to do the work satisfactorily, the contractor was not an independent contractor. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Hanning, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 649, 21 L. ed. 220. Where an excavation was to be made as the employer's engineer should direct, and any one refusing to obey the engineer's orders was to be discharged by the contractor, he is not an independent contractor. Larson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 110 Mo. 234, 19 S. W. 416, 33 Am. St. Rep. 439, 16 L. R. A. 330. And see, generally, Waters v. Greenleaf-Johnson Lumber Co., 115 N. C. 648, 20 S. E. 718.

The right to supervise does not make the employer liable to a servant of the contractor because of a failure to supervise, where the servant is injured, since the reservation accrues solely to the benefit and security of the employer and creates no duty on his part on behalf of the contractor's workmen. Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164, 13 N. W. 499, 43 Am. Rep. 456; Burke v. Ireland, 26 N. Y. App. Div. 487, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 369.

40. Vosbeck v. Kellogg, 78 Minn. 176, 80 N. W. 957. And see Morgan v. Smith, 179 Mass. 570, 35 N. E. 101, holding that the mere fact that the architect of the owner directs certain things to be done by the contractor, where he does not exercise any control over him in his manner of doing the work, or his choice of workmen, does not make the contractor a servant of the owner.

41. Schwartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 455, 92 Am. Dec. 227; Erie v. Caulkins, 85 Pa. St. 247, 27 Am. Rep. 642. See also as sustaining this view Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 Pac. 337.

quantity of work to be done,⁴² or the right to make any deviation from the contract⁴³ is not a right to control the mode or manner of doing the work so as to make the contractee liable. And it has been held that the fact that the contractee's representative directs how the work is to be done does not affect the independency of the contract.⁴⁴

d. Control of Premises. The fact that the owner of the premises on which work is to be done by an employee retains control thereof does not prevent the employee being an independent contractor.⁴⁵

e. Mode of Payment. While payment for the whole work by a specific sum is one of the ordinary incidents of an independent contract, and the mode of payment is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether one is an independent contractor,⁴⁶ the mode of payment is not conclusive nor the test as to the relationship.⁴⁷ One may be an independent contractor, although not to be paid a round sum for his work,⁴⁸ as where paid by the day,⁴⁹ or the cost of the work and a per cent.⁵⁰ On the other hand a person is not an independent contractor merely because paid by the piece or job.⁵¹

f. Furnishing of Material and Appliances. An employee is not an independent contractor merely because he furnishes the appliances and materials, or either.⁵² On the other hand the fact that materials are furnished by the employer does not prevent the employee being an independent contractor.⁵³ a wagon was not subject to discharge by defendant and was in nowise under its control beyond the fact that it had the right to instruct him when to haul its product, he is not deemed its servant, and the doctrine of independent contractor applies. *Chicago Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Reservation by owner of use of premises.—The fact that a railroad company reserved the right to run its trains over a bridge during the time of its repair by an experienced bridge builder does not destroy the independency of the contractor's employment. Bibb v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163.

Mode and amount of payment.—That a person alleged to be an independent contractor is employed at two dollars per day, and hires other persons at the rate of one dollar and a half per day, does not take away the independent character of his employment. *Karl v. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 1242 et seq.

Name of employer on wagons.—The fact that defendant's name was upon the wagons, which, however, belonged to the employee, does not prevent the employee being an independent contractor. Foster v. Wadsworth-Howland Co., 168 Ill. 514, 48 N. E. 163.

g. Power to Terminate Contract. The fact that the contract provides that the employer or his representative may discharge the contractor at any time or upon the happening of certain contingencies, while a fact to be considered,⁵⁴ is not conclusive that the contractor is not an independent contractor.⁵⁵

h. Power Over Assistants. The reservation to the employer of the right to demand the discharge of the contractor's servants under certain circumstances does not affect the relationship of independent contractor where it otherwise exists.⁵⁶ So the fact that in practice employees would discharge their servants, on request of the employers, for refusal to observe certain rules, and that the employers objected to the hiring of a certain class of servants, does not show such reservation of control as creates the relation of master and servant.⁵⁷ So the right to annul the contract for a failure to employ a force in kind and quality to the satisfaction of the employer's representative does not show such a right of selection of the contractor's servant as to make the employer liable for injuries thereto.⁵⁸

i. Subcontractors. A subcontractor under an original contractor may be an independent contractor as to such original contractor.⁵⁹ And in determining whether a subcontractor is an independent contractor, in so far as his relation to the principal contractor is concerned, the same rules apply that have already been considered as between the original employer and employee.⁶⁰

j. Dual Capacity of Servant and Contractor. The fact that a person is a servant of his employer in respect to certain work does not preclude his being an independent contractor as regards other work.⁶¹

2. GENERAL RULE AS TO NON-LIABILITY OF CONTRACTEE — a. Contractor Not Servant. An independent contractor is not a servant within the rule that makes a

Right to discharge as if ordinary laborer.—So the fact that the alleged contractor, although there was no express provision in the contract in regard thereto, could be discharged the same as any ordinary laborer, is to be considered in support of the contention that he is not an independent contractor. *Texas, etc., R. Contract not executed in good faith.—Where it appears that a contract between the original contractor and a subcontractor was not executed in good faith to express the real relation of the parties, or if, notwithstanding such contract, supervision of the work was assumed by the original contractor, then the application of the doctrine of respondet superior is to be determined by the conduct of the parties. *Klages v. master liable to third persons for the acts of his servants. The work done by the independent contractor is not under the control and direction of the contractee.⁶²

b. Early English Rule. An early case in England,⁶³ followed by a few decisions in this country,⁶⁴ holding the contractee liable for the acts of the contractor or the contractor's servants has been directly overruled and is not now the law in any state.⁶⁵ Likewise the distinction attempted to be drawn by that case between the owner of real and personal property, and attaching liability to the owner of real property upon which work is being done by an independent contractor because of the ownership of the property,⁶⁶ has been expressly overruled in England,⁶⁷ and has been distinctly and unanimously disclaimed as authority in this country.⁶⁸

c. Existing Rule. Although the rule is stated in the decisions in many different ways, and although there is a considerable conflict of authority as to whether a particular state of facts brings the case within the general rule relieving the contractee from liability, or causes it to fall within one of the exceptions which render him liable, the general rule deducible from the decisions is that where the relation of an independent contract exists, and due diligence has been exercised in selecting a competent contractor, and the thing contracted to be done is not in itself a nuisance, nor will necessarily result in a nuisance if proper precautionary measures are used, and an injury to a third person results, not from the fact that the work is done, but from the wrongful or negligent manner of doing it by a contractor or his servants, the contractee is not liable therefor.⁶⁹ A

Control of premises.—To relieve the employer from liability, where the work is done upon his premises by an independent contractor, it is not necessary that the entire and exclusive control of the premises is surrendered to such contractor, it being sufficient that the contractor is in possession of that part of the premises upon which the work is to be done with the exclusive control of the work. Illustrations of rule.—The owner of a building abutting upon the sidewalk of a public street in a city, who employs competent mechanics to paint the same, retaining no control over the manner of doing the work, and giving no directions as to the details thereof, is not liable for injuries to persons on the walk below, resulting from the negligence of such mechanics in permitting a coil of rope to fall from their scaffolds. Geist v. Rothschild, 90 Ill. App. 324. Owners of property adjacent to a street, while improving it, owe no duty to the city and the public of placing safeguards around obstructions placed in the street by independent contractors. Independence v. Slack, 134 Mo. 66, 34 S. W. 1094.

Interference with party-walls.—Where the owner of one of two adjoining buildings supported by a party-wall makes a change in the position of the beams in the party-wall, in improving his property, but the work is of such a description that it can be performed with perfect safety to the party-wall, he is not liable to the owner of the adjoining building either as a trespasser or for the negligence of an independent contractor who performs the work. Keller v. Abrahams, 13 excavations,⁷⁴ and railroad construction contracts.⁷⁵ So the rule has been applied to torts of such independent contractors as draymen,⁷⁶ contractors for the removal of a building or wall,⁷⁷ and contractors for the laying of a sidewalk.⁷⁸ So where a contractor agrees to clear land⁷⁹ or to protect property from fire by burning around it,⁸⁰ the owner is not liable for the negligence of the contractor or his servant in performing such contract whereby the fire is communicated to other property.

e. Acts of Subcontractors. The principle upon which the superior who has contracted with another exercising an independent employment for the doing of the work is exempt from liability for the negligence or other wrongful act of the latter in the execution of it applies as between the contractor and his subcontractor.⁸¹ The original contractor may be liable, however, under the same circumstances which constitute an exception to the general rule exempting the original contractee from liability.⁸² The original contractor is liable where he

See St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Yonley, 53 Ark. 503, 14 S. W. 800, 9 L. R. A. 604, holding that liability depends on whether burning of rubbish was, under the circumstances, dangerous to property of adjoining proprietors, even if carefully performed.

Effect of statute.—A statute providing that if any "hireling" shall wilfully set fire to any woods, etc., so as to occasion damage to any other person, with the consent or by the command of the employer, such employer shall be liable, refers to the servants of a railroad company but not to independent contractors. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Yonley, (Ark. 1890) 13 S. W. 333.

An independent contractor is not liable for the negligence of another independent contractor or his employee, the latter being employed by the owner, even though the latter's contract is in the nature of a subcontract. Rubin v. Miller, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 351.

82. See infra, V, B, 3.

Where joint supervision and coöperation of the principal contractor of a building on a highway and of his subcontractor of a portion of it becomes necessary and is exercised, a joint obligation to the public will exist, and joint liability be fixed for personal injury to a stranger resulting from an act done or duty omitted by the latter during prosecution of the business. Baumeister v. Markham, 101 Ky. 271, 39 S. W. 844, 41 S. W. 816, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 308, 72 Am. St. Rep. 397.

Acceptance of work.—A contractor who sublets part of the work and knows, or might with reasonable care and diligence have known, that the work sublet was done retains even partial control of the work let out,⁸³ or where the injury is caused by the order of a servant of the contractor who had charge of the work.⁸⁴ So the duty of the contractor in constructing a building may render him liable for failure to properly oversee and protect the work done by a subcontractor.⁸⁵

3. CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH CONTRACTEE LIABLE—a. In General. There are certain well-recognized exceptions to the rule exempting a contractee from liability, although there is considerable conflict in the authorities as to when the general rule applies and when the case is within an exception, and considerable difficulty is encountered in determining under what particular exception the contractee should be held liable.

b. Injury From Work Contractor Employed to Do—(1) IN GENERAL. Where the act which causes the injury is one which the contractor was employed to do and the injury results, not from the manner of doing the work but from the doing of it at all, the employer is liable for the acts of his independent contractor.⁸⁶ So where the work which the contractor is employed to do is wrong-improperly, or with improper materials, so that it is unsafe, but who incorporates the work as his own and accepts it as it proceeds, is liable for injuries to a third person, resulting from acts of the subcontractor. Bast v. Leonard, 15 Minn. 304.

Canada.—Wheelhouse v. Darch, 28 U. C. C. P. 269.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 1259.

Illustrations of rule.—An owner of shore land, who contracts with another to dredge in front of it, and deposit the dredging on the rear, without providing means of preventing it from sliding on the land of an adjacent owner, is as much a trespasser as the contractor, where the deposit spreads on the adjacent land, for it is the thing contracted to be done which produces the injury. Braisted v. Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 46 N. Y. App. Div. 204, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 674. Where the obstruction of a street was the direct and necessary incident of certain work, liability on the part of the employer for negligence in respect thereto cannot be avoided on the ground that the work was being performed by an independent contractor. Johnston v. Phoenix Bridge Co., 44 N. Y. App. Div. 581, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 947 [affirmed in 169 N. Y. 581, 62 N. E. 1096]. The fact that a building is being erected by an independent contractor does not exempt the owner from liability for injuries to pedestrians arising from the negligent failure of the contractor to guard excavations adjacent to the sidewalk, and required to be made by the specifications for the building. Wiggin v. St. Louis, 135 Mo. 558, 37 S. W. 528.

Where the injury does not necessarily result from the work a contractee is not liable under this exception. Strauss v. Louisville, 108 Ky. 155, 55 S. W. 1075; Hackett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 80 Wis. 187, 49 N. W. 822; Butler v. Hunter, 7 H. & N. 826, 31 L. J. Exch. 214, 10 Wkly. Rep. 214. For instance, if a contractor erects in the street an embankment, not in the performance of his contract nor called for by it, the contractee is not liable. Chattahoochee, etc., R. Co. v. Behrman, 136 Ala. 508, 35 So. 132.

ful in itself,⁸⁷ or if done in the ordinary manner would result in a nuisance,⁸⁸ the contractee is liable for injury resulting to third persons, although the work is done by an independent contractor. For instance, where the work involves the commission of a trespass, or where a trespass is committed by the advice or direction of the contractee, he cannot escape liability because the work was done by an independent contractor.⁸⁹

Work not necessarily resulting in nuisance.—The building of a railroad does not necessarily result in a nuisance (Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Kimberly, 87 Ga. 161, 13 S. E. 277, 27 Am. St. Rep. 231), nor is the operation of a portable engine six feet or more over a public highway necessarily a nuisance (Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 12 N. E. 296, 60 Am. Rep. 696). The fact that the property is capable of being so used as to constitute a nuisance does not make the contractee liable. Carter v. Berlin Mills Co., 58 N. H. 52, 42 Am. Rep. 572. So the contractee is not liable where the contract itself does not call for the creation of an obstruction in the street which would constitute a nuisance. *Green v. When trespass not directed.—Where no trespass is directed or called for by the work the contractee is not liable therefor. McKinley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 40 Mo. App. 449. Where a statute required a landowner excavating for a building to shore up the walls of adjacent buildings, where given the necessary license to enter upon the adjoining land, the letting of a contract to do such shoring "as required by law" is not a direc-

(ii) DEFECTIVE PLANS OR METHODS. Where the injury is due to the contractee's defective plans or methods, pursuant to which the work was done, such plans or methods being furnished or directed by the contractee, he is liable,⁹⁰ except when the plans were prepared by a skilful architect employed by the owner, and he used ordinary care in the selection of an architect, and the defects in the plans in no way proceeded from the direction or interference of the contractor.⁹¹

c. Work Dangerous Unless Precautions Observed. Another exception to the general rule, closely related to the one just considered, is that where the work is dangerous of itself, or as often termed is "inherently" or "intrinsically" dangerous, unless proper precautions are taken, liability cannot be evaded by employing an independent contractor to do the work.⁹² Stated in another way, where tion by the owner to the contractor to commit a trespass on the adjacent buildings without first obtaining a license and against the protests of the occupants. Ketcham v. Newman, 141 N. Y. 205, 36 N. E. 197, 24 L. R. A. 102.

In New York the exception is limited to work "intrinsically" dangerous, and the contractee is held not liable where "the act to be done may be safely done in the exercise of due care, although in the absence of such care injurious consequences to third persons would be likely to result." Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100, 32 N. E. 1052, 33 Am. St. Rep. 692.

The tearing down of a wall destroyed by fire is dangerous work and the contractee is bound to see that reasonable care is used. Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. Steinbrock, 61 Ohio St. 215, 55 N. What work is not dangerous.—It has been held that the making a cellar in a building waterproof is not inherently dangerous (Maltbie v. Bolting, 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 339, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 903), nor is the raising of a party-wall (Negus v. Becker, 143 N. Y. 303, 38 N. E. 290, 42 Am. St. Rep. 724, 25 L. R. A. 667), the clearing off wood and brush from a piece of land (Ferguson v. Hubbell, 97 N. Y. 507, 49 Am. Rep. 544), the floating logs injuries to third persons must be expected to arise unless means are adopted by which such consequences may be prevented, the contractee is bound to see to the doing of that which is necessary to prevent the mischief.⁹³ The injury need not be a necessary result of the work;⁹⁴ but the work must be such as will probably, and not which merely may, cause injury if proper precautions are not taken.⁹⁵ down stream (Pierpont v. Loveless, 72 N. Y. 211), the constructing a telephone line (Vosbeck v. Kellogg, 78 Minn. 176, 80 N. W. 957), or the pulling down a house (Butler v. Hunter, 7 H. & N. 826, 31 L. J. Exch. 214, 10 Wkly. Rep. 214). The erection of buildings adjacent to a highway, with the usual and necessary excavations, and the consequent obstructions to the sidewalk and street, is not within the exception to the general rule, which attaches liability to employers where the work in hand is inherently dangerous, or will necessarily create a nuisance. Richmond v. Sitterding, 101 Va. 354, 43 S. E. 562, 65 L. R. A. 445. And see Neumann v. Greenleaf Real Estate Co., 73 Mo. App. 326.

Dangerous machinery.—Where the employer is to furnish machinery for the contractor and a machine is included therein which is dangerous when operated by one not properly instructed, the contractee is liable to an employee of the contractor injured thereby because not properly instructed as to its use. Jacobs v. Fuller, etc., Co., 67 Ohio St. 70, 65 N. E. 617, 65 L. R. A. 833. But see Southern Oil Co. v. Church, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 325, 74 S. W. 797, 75 S. W. 817. Compare Wood v. Mitchell Independent School Dist., 44 Iowa 27, where dangerous work is distinguished from work in which dangerous machinery is employed, and it was held that where a person contracted for drilling a well and left his drilling machine unlocked and unguarded and children were injured while playing with it, the contractee was not liable.

sulting in the burning of the property of the adjacent owner, where the negligence flows directly from the acts which the contractor agrees to do, and is by the proprietor authorized to do, and is the natural and probable consequence of the performance of the work in the manner and at the time agreed on. Cameron v. Oberlin, 19 Ind. App. 142, 48 N. E. 386. And see Black v. Christ Church Finance Co., [1894] A. C. 48, 58 J. P. 332, 63 L. J. P. C. 32, 70 L. T. Rep. N. S. 77, 6 Reports 394. But see supra, V, B, 2.

Restatement of rule.—"A man who orders a work to be executed, from which, in the natural course of things, injurious consequences to his neighbour must be expected to arise, unless means are adopted by which such consequences may be prevented, is bound to see to the doing of that which is necessary to prevent the mischief, and cannot relieve himself of his responsibility by employing some one else—whether it be the contractor employed to do the work from which the danger arises or some independent person—to do what is necessary to prevent the act he has ordered to be done from becoming wrongful. There is an obvious difference between committing work to a contractor to be executed from which, if properly done, no injurious consequences can arise, and handing over to him work to be done from which mischievous consequences will arise unless preventive measures are adopted." Bower v. Peate, 1 Q. B. D. 321, 326, 45 L. J. Q. B. 446, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 321.

Collateral negligence in connection with work not contemplated by the contract does not render the contractee liable. Boomer v. Wilbur, 176 Mass. 482, 57 N. E. 1004, 53 L. R. A. 172; Hackett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 80 Wis. 187, 49 N. W. 822.

95. Bibb v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 87 Va. 711, 725, 14 S. E. 163. In this case the court said: "Work is constantly being performed by independent contractors, as well as others, which in the nature of things may, in the course of its execution, result in injury to others; but it by no means follows that an employer in any such case must personally supervise the work and see that the necessary precautions are taken, and that, for his failure to do so, he must be held liable in damages for injuries to other persons. For if, in the nature of things, the mere liability of the work to result in injury to some one be made the test, then it is obvious that the line of distinction becomes shadowy and indistinct between acts which are unlawful, or are per se nuisances, or that

This rule is most often applied to work which is dangerous to persons using streets or highways, such as excavations in or adjacent to streets, including the construction of a street railway or other like work.⁹⁶ So where it might reasonably be anticipated that the work would probably cause an injury to an adjoining owner the contractee is liable especially where he gives no notice of the nature and extent of the work to the adjoining owner.⁹⁷ Another application of the rule is found in decisions holding that when the owner of premises which are under his control employs an independent contractor to do work upon them which from its nature is likely to render the premises dangerous to persons who may come upon them by the invitation of the owner, the owner is not relieved by reason of the contract from the obligation of seeing that due care is used to protect such persons.⁹⁸ cannot be done without doing damage, and those the performance of which not only may, but in the nature of things must often be committed to others; as is the case with a railway company in the construction and repair of its roadway, bridges, and other structures."

While a company constructing a telephone line cannot relieve itself from liability by contracting with another, with regard to obstructions in the street which make it dangerous to the traveling public, yet the owner is not liable for the acts of an independent contractor in negligently failing to keep a child from voluntarily interfering with one of the appliances used in doing the work. *Vosbeck v. d. Non-Delegable Duties of Contractee⁹⁹ — (i) STATEMENT OF RULE. Another exception to the general rule is that a person causing something to be done, the doing of which casts upon him a duty, cannot escape from the responsibility attaching on him of seeing that duty performed by delegating it to an independent contractor.¹

contractor does not wholly relieve the principal from responsibility for accidents, since it would probably cause injury to a spectator, unless due precautions were taken to guard against harm. Thompson v. Lowell, etc., St. R. Co., 170 Mass. 577, 49 N. E. 913, 64 Am. St. Rep. 323, 40 L. R. A. 345.

Balloon ascensions.—When a company advertises a balloon ascension at its park, it is liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of the person employed by it to make the ascension, in failing to warn visitors that the poles will fall when the balloon is released, although he be an independent contractor. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 94 Va. 493, 27 S. E. 70, 37 L. R. A. 258. But see Smith v. Benick, 87 Md. 610, 41 Atl. 56, 42 L. R. A. 277, holding that where a person employed to make the ascension was free to exercise his own judgment as to the means of making it, and in inflating the balloon the contractor used implements not contemplated by his employment, without the proprietor's knowledge, the latter was not liable for injuries sustained by a spectator through the use of such instruments.

The non-performance by the owner of a building in the course of erection of the duty imposed by an ordinance requiring the erection of a roofed passageway over the sidewalk after the completion of the first story cannot be excused by a plea that an independent contractor has agreed to perform the duty. general contractor the owner is not liable where the duty is in connection with work done by the contractor.⁴

(III) *EXISTENCE OF CORPORATE FRANCHISE.*⁵ Corporations have been held liable for the wrongful act of an independent contractor while exercising, with the assent of the corporation, some chartered power or privilege of the corporation;⁶ but the liability is limited to wrongs done in the performance of acts which could not have been done except for the existence of the charter of the

r. McConnell, 87 Ga. 756, 13 S. E. 828. However, this exception does not apply merely because of the existence of building laws, since they do not confer the privilege of building but merely limit existing rights. Burke v. Ireland, 26 N. Y. App. Div. 487, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 369.

Applications of rule.—Where a municipal ordinance requires the owner of materials forming an obstruction in a street to prepare and place lights thereon with such care and diligence as reasonably to secure their burning till daylight, such owner is liable to third persons for injuries occurred through negligence in the performance of this duty, either by himself or by a contractor in his employ. Wilson v. White, 71 Ga. 506, 51 Am. Rep. 269. One who employs another to fill his ice-house by the cord, and obtains license from the municipal authorities to encumber the street for that purpose, cannot shield himself from liability for injuries caused by unlawfully obstructing the street with blocks and fragments of the ice, under an objection that his employee was a contractor, and alone liable. Darmstaetter v. Moynahan, 27 Mich. 188.

Obstructions purely collateral to work contracted to be done.—When an obstruction or defect, caused or created in a public street, is purely collateral to the work contracted to be done, and is entirely the result of the wrongful acts of the contractor or his workmen, the owner of the premises is not liable. Davie v. Levy, 39 La. Ann. 551, 2 So. 395, 4 Am. St. Rep. 225. So where a street car company, authorized by charter to build a street railroad, lets a contract for constructing the road to an independent contractor, without any agreement as to the particular manner in which the work shall be done, it is not liable for injuries caused by a wire stretched across the road by such contractor in the course of the work. Sanford v. Pawtucket St. R. Co., 19 R. I. 537, 35 Atl. 67, 33 L. R. A. 564.

App. 359; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Conroy, 39 Ill. App. 351, holding that a contractor engaged in changing the gauge of a railroad is a servant of the company so as to make it chargeable with his negligence in causing an injury to one of his employees. And see Chicago Bridge, etc., Co. v. La Mantia, 112 Ill. App. 43.

In Illinois this rule seems to have been carried further than in any other state. It is held that a contractor exercising the chartered power of a corporation, with its assent, must be regarded, in so far as the public and third persons are concerned, as the servant or agent of the corporation. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. v. Dick, 87 Ill. App. 40. Where a corporation is authorized by its charter to enter upon the premises of individuals and take therefrom materials for the construction of its work, and provision was made for assessing the value of the materials taken and damages occasioned by reason of the taking, and judgment was to be rendered against the corporation for such value in damages, it was held liable for the act of a contractor in taking such materials. Hinde v. Wabash Nav. Co., 15 Ill. 72; Leshner v. Wabash Nav. Co., 14 Ill. 85, 56 Am. Dec. 494. So where acts of incorporation conferred the right to enter upon premises and construct a railroad track over them, and the work was let to contractors, who entered upon land and took down the fences and left them down, resulting in the killing of stock and other damages, the corporation was liable. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. 105; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Finnigan, 21 Ill. 646; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McCarthy, 20 Ill. 385, 71 Am. Dec. 285. Where an elevated railway company was authorized to occupy certain public streets by a city ordinance, and let certain construction work to an independent contractor, it was liable for the negligence of the contractor's servants in dropping a heavy piece of steel on a pedestrian who was passing under the structure, since the contractor was performing the work by virtue of a special privilege granted the corporation by its charter and by the ordinance. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. v. Dick, supra. A gas company authorized to construct mains through the streets of a city cannot avoid liability for negligence in such construction by letting a contract to a third person, as such person will be regarded as its agent while exercising any of the powers granted under its franchise. Chicago Economic Fuel Gas Co. v. Myers, 168 Ill. 139, 48 N. E. 66 [affirming 64 Ill. App. 270].

Railroad companies.—Especially is this exception applicable to a railroad corporation company.⁷ If the act is one which might have been done by an individual, no different rule obtains as to liability merely because it is a corporation.⁸

(IV) CONTRACT DUTY. Where a person is bound by contract to do particular work he cannot avoid responsibility by contracting with another person to do the work.⁹

e. Employment of Incompetent Contractor. A contractor is liable for the negligent or wrongful acts of an independent contractor where he knew his bad character for negligence when he employed him or where he failed to exercise due and reasonable care to select a competent and skilful contractor.¹⁰ But knowledge of the incompetency of the contractor has been held not to make the contractee liable to a servant of the contractor for injuries resulting therefrom.¹¹ The fact that a contractor is negligent in respect of the work in question raises no presumption that the employer was guilty of negligence in employing him.¹²

f. Active Interference With Work. Any interference, assumption of con-which is given the right of eminent domain. Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 30 Kan. 601, 2 Pac. 657. And see on this subject cases cited supra, this note.

Operation of railroad.—The exception has been applied to the operation of a railroad by an independent contractor. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Hahn, 9 Pa. Cas. 364, 12 Atl. 479. Contra, see Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 18 Kan. 34.

St. Louis, etc., R. Co.*, 63 Ill. 545; Suburban R. Co. v. Balkwill, 94 Ill. App. 454; Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. v. Dick, 87 Ill. App. 40.

The construction of a railroad by a contractor upon the right of way and property of a railroad corporation is not the exercise of charter powers or privileges by the contractor. Boyd v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 217 Ill. 332, 75 N. E. 496, 108 Am. St. Rep. 253 [affirming 118 Ill. App. 433].

Another statement of rule.—The principle that a railroad company cannot delegate to an employee its chartered rights and privileges so as to exempt it from liability does not extend to the use of the ordinary ways and means for the construction of the road, but to the use of such extraordinary powers only as the company itself could not exercise without having first complied with the conditions of the legislative grant of authority. Thus, after having first procured the right of way, the company can delegate to another lawful authority to enter upon the same and make its road-bed and perform other proper acts of construction; but it cannot delegate such lawful authority without having first secured the right of way by donation, purchase, or the exercise of the right of eminent domain. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Kimberly, 87 Ga. 161, 13 S. E. 277, 27 Am. St. Rep. 231; Sanford v. Pawtucket St. R. Co., 19 R. I. 537, 35 Atl. 67, 33 L. R. A. 564; *Cunningham v. International R. Illustration of rule.—An incorporated company which undertook to lay water-pipes in a city, agreeing that it would protect all persons against damages by reason of excavations made by them in laying pipes, and to be responsible for all damages which might occur by reason of the neglect of their employees on the premises, was held liable for injuries received by one passing over the street owing to the negligence of a subcontractor to whom the work had been let out. St. Paul Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 566, 21 L. ed. 485. A railroad company which, in the notarial act granting it the right of way, has agreed with the landowner to pay all damages caused by it or its employees in the construction of the road, cannot avoid the liability thus created by letting the work out to contractors. Bechnel v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 28 La. Ann. 522.

trol, or directions given by the contractee or his representative as to work being done by contractors, may render him personally liable for injuries caused to third persons by the negligent conduct of such contractors in work done in obedience to such directions.¹³

g. Ratification of Contractor's Act. A contractee may be liable for the negligent or wrongful act of the contractor or the contractor's servants, although not otherwise liable, because of his ratification of such acts.¹⁴

h. Abandonment, Completion, or Acceptance of the Work. If the work is completed the contractee is responsible for injuries thereafter resulting from its imperfect construction or dangerous condition in which he permits it to remain,¹⁵ especially after the contractee has accepted the work.¹⁶ So where the contractor is dismissed,¹⁷ or where he abandons the contract and the owner assumes control,¹⁸ the contractee's liability attaches as to injuries thereafter resulting from the work done.

i. Failure to Remedy Nuisance. After notice to the contractor during the progress of the work that it is necessary to create a nuisance to do the work, the contractor is liable for injuries to third persons occurring thereafter where he fails to take such steps as are in his power to suppress the nuisance.¹⁹

Where a railroad construction contractor is left without discretion, and must implicitly follow the directions of the locating engineer, the railroad company is responsible for every wrong done by the contractor in grading the road-bed, on the ground that such grading is conclusively presumed to have been done pursuant to its directions, given through its engineer, unless the contractor went beyond instructions, and inflicted an injury outside of the limits of his contractual duties. that of the contractee in causing the injury, the contractee is liable.²⁰ So where a part of the work is done by employees of the contractee, the failure to guard the work done by such employees renders the contractee liable, although other work in connection therewith was performed by an independent contractor.²¹

4. STIPULATIONS AS EXEMPTING CONTRACTEE FROM LIABILITY. One who employs another as a contractor cannot release himself from liability for damages by any stipulation with the contractor in so far as the rights of third persons who may be injured are concerned.²²

5. LIABILITY OF CONTRACTEE TO SERVANTS OF CONTRACTOR — a. General Rule. Ordinarily the contractor and not the contractee is the person liable to an employee of the contractor for injuries received by the employee in the course of his employment;²³ and the contractee is not liable to the employees of a contractor for

The owner, where he designs a safe and proper building, and employs a competent builder as contractor for its construction, is not liable to the workmen of the contractor or his subcontractor for injury from the defective condition of the building occasioned by the negligence of the contractor. Murphy v. Altman, 28 N. Y. App. Div. 472, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 106; Burke v. Ireland, 26 N. Y. App. Div. 487, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 369. And in such a case the owner is not liable to an employee of one contractor for an injury caused by the negligence of another independent contractor. Murphy v. Altman, supra.

Guaranty of skill and care of contractor.—One who employs a contractor to erect a building, or to do any other mechanical work, does not become a guarantor to all the employees of the contractor for his skill and care in performing the work. In such a case the contractor is a principal of the persons whom he employs. Hunt v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 51 Pa. St. 475.

the negligence of the employees of another contractor.²⁴ The liability of the contractee to the servants of the contractor is not as extensive as his liability to third persons, that is, the act may be such as to render the contractee liable to third persons, although it would not make him liable to a servant of the contractor.²⁵ In order to make the owner liable to the employees of an independent contractor for injuries received by the employees there must be some negligence on the part of the owner.²⁶ Where the real cause of the injury is the negligence of a servant of the contractee working together with the servants of the contractor, the contractee is liable.²⁷

b. Safety of Place to Work and Appliances. Except where there are statutory provisions to the contrary,²⁸ the owner of real estate does not ordinarily owe to a person employed on his premises in the service of an independent contractor the duty to furnish a safe place for work, and for omission to do so he is not liable in damages.²⁹ But the owner may be liable, under particular circumstances, where a duty devolving on him is not fulfilled.³⁰ In the absence of furnishing of unsafe tools by the contractor. Omaha Bridge, etc., R. Co. v. Hargadine, 5 Nebr. (Unoff.) 418, 98 N. W. 1071.

Repair on building damaged by fire.—Where the owner of a building damaged by fire turns it over to an independent contractor to repair, he is not, because of the arrangement of the interior, which may become dangerous to one not familiar therewith, liable to the servant of one whom the contractor employs on the building for damages caused by personal injuries received. Butler v. Lewman, 115 Ga. 752, 42 S. E. 98.

Rule applicable as between contractor and subcontractor.—An employee of a subcontractor cannot recover from the contractor for personal injuries caused by his employer's negligence, if the contractor retained no power of directing and controlling the work. Mohr v. McKenzie, 60 Ill. App. 575. See Diehl v. Robinson, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 19, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 252. In order to find a contractor responsible to a person working for a subcontractor on the reconstruction of a building, there must be some act of personal negligence on the part of the contractor which caused the accident, independent of all other causes. Nelson v. Young, 91 N. Y. App. Div. 457, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 69 [affirmed in 180 N. Y. 523, 72 N. E. 1146].

Mistake as to employment.—The fact that some of the servants were paid at the store of the contractee, and that some of them thought they were working for him, is immaterial. Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427, 26 Pac. 834. But see Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 30 Kan. 601, 2 Pac. 657.

Premises under control of owner.—But if the premises on which the contractor's employees are at work in carrying out the contract are under the control of the owner it is his duty to use reasonable care to see that they are safe. Kelleher v. Schmitt, etc., Mfg. Co., 122 Iowa 635, 98 N. W. 482. The servants of an independent contractor are deemed to be upon the premises of the proprietor by his implied invitation; and he is bound to exercise reasonable care to protect them from dangers arising from the condition of the premises, of which he is aware and concerning which they have neither actual nor constructive knowledge. Stevens v. United Gas, etc., Co., 73 N. H. 159, 60 Atl. 848, 70 L. R. A. 119.

30. See Perkins v. Furness, 167 Mass. 403, 45 N. E. 759; O'Driscoll v. Faxon, 156 Mass. 527, 31 N. E. 685; Horner v. Nicholson, 56 Mo. 220; Stevens v. United Gas, etc., Co., 73 N. H. 159, 60 Atl. 848, 70 L. R. A. 119, holding that where plaintiff was employed by an independent contractor on the construction of a power-house for defendant electric company, and a staging had been erected outside the walls and within a short distance of defendant's electric wires, defendant owed a non-delegable duty to plaintiff of using reasonable care to protect him from the concealed danger occasioned by the maintenance of a high voltage of electricity on such wires.

Agreement to erect supports.—Where the owner agreed with the contractor to erect supports when notified by the contractor that they were necessary, the owner is liable to an employee of the contractor for injuries received because of the lack of such supports, although not notified by the contractor, where he had actual knowledge of the necessity therefor. Kelly v. Howell, 41 Ohio St. 438. To the same effect see Toomey v. Donovan, 158 Mass. 232, 33 N. E. 396.

provisions therefor in the contract the contractor is usually under no duty to furnish any appliances for the contractor.³¹ But if unsafe appliances are furnished by the contractee and a servant of the contractor is injured thereby the contractee is liable,³² especially where it is the duty of the contractee to furnish them

Where the owner and contractor work together, each doing certain work and dividing the profits, it is the duty of the owner to see that the place of work is in a reasonably safe condition. Rice v. Smith, 171 Mo. 331, 71 S. W. 123.

Where a contractor employs a subcontractor to do certain portions of the work, the contractor is bound to do his part of the work so as to render it safe for the employee of the subcontractor. Johnston v. Ott, 155 Pa. St. 17, 25 Atl. 751. The duty of shoring a building rests on the contractor as against subcontractors, in the absence of proof to the contrary. Nelson v. Young, 91 N. Y. App. Div. 457, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 69.

If the owner of a mine turns it over to contractors when it is in an unsafe condition of which he knows or might know by exercising proper care, he is responsible for injuries resulting to a miner who is put to work in ignorance of the danger. Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164, 173, 13 N. W. 499, 43 Am. Rep. 456. In this case the court said: "The owner may rent a mine, resigning all charge and control over it, and at the same time put off all responsibility for what may occur in it afterwards. If he transfers no nuisance with it, and provides for nothing by his lease which will expose others to danger, he will from that time have no more concern with the consequences to others than any third person. If instead of leasing he puts contractors in possession the result must be the same as if there is nothing in the contract which is calculated to bring about danger. But if, on the other hand, he retains charge and control, and gives workmen a right to understand that he is caring for their safety and that they may rely upon him to guard against negligent conduct in the contractors and others, his moral accountability for their safety is as broad as it would be if he were working the mine in person; and his legal accountability ought to be commensurate with it." Where a mining corporation contracting for the removal of ore reserves to itself such arrangements as are necessary for the protection of workmen, it is liable for such injuries as happen to employees of the contractors without the fault of the employees. Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 Mich. 492, 33 Am. Rep. 423.

31. See Wingert v. Krakauer, 92 N. Y. App. Div. 223, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 261, holding that defendants who had employed an independent contractor to install machinery for a factory were under no obligation to erect a scaffold necessary for their use in that work.

Civ. App. 325, 74 S. W. 797, 75 S. W. 817, holding that, where defendant furnished an independent contractor a derrick with which to do the work, defendant was not liable for injuries to a servant of such contractor by reason of the derrick's defective condition, in the absence of proof that it was inherently dangerous or that defendant intentionally or wilfully caused the injury.

Scaffold.—Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co., 56 N. Y. 124, 15 Am. Rep. 387; Hoffner v. Prettyman, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 20, 41 Wkly. Notes Cas. 258. See Wingert v. Krakauer, 92 N. Y. App. Div. 223, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 261, where it was held that defendant did not furnish or erect the scaffold, merely because two workmen whom defendant had agreed to furnish to assist the contractor had erected the scaffold by the direction of defendant's foreman. If materials for a scaffold are selected by servants of the contractor, with the consent of the contractee, but in the absence of any agreement in regard thereto, from lumber on the premises, and the scaffold breaks, the contractee is not liable, especially where it is not shown that proper lumber could not have been found on the premises. Callahan v. Phillips Academy, 180 Mass. 183, 62 N. E. 260.

Where the materials furnished by the owner are rejected by the employees of the contractor, and such employees select other materials belonging to the owner, the latter is not liable for an injury resulting from the use of such other materials. Nugent v. Atlas Steamship Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 306, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 861, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 66 [affirmed in 147 N. Y. 709, 42 N. E. 724].

Consent to use of appliances.—But the use of defective appliances belonging to the owner, with his consent, where the owner is under no duty to furnish the appliances, does not make him liable. Bush v. Grant, 61 S. W. 363, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1766.

By statute in some states the owner is liable to an employee of the contractor who is injured because of defects in the appliances furnished by the contractee to the contractor. Toomey v. Donovan, 158 Mass. 232, 33 N. E. 396.

Negligent use of appliances.—But where the contractee furnishes tools and machinery he is not liable for an injury to an employee of the contractor resulting from the negligent use thereof. Reier v. Detroit Steel, etc., Works, 109 Mich. 244, 67 N. W. 120.

Machinery dangerous to operate without instructions.—Where the contractee furnished all the tools and a machine danger-

because of his agreement with the contractor;³³ but if safe appliances are furnished and they afterward become defective, the contractor is not liable,³⁴ unless the contract is construed as calling for continued supervision of the appliances.³⁵ Where the contractee agrees to furnish material to make the place safe for work, and he fails to do so, he is liable to a servant of the contractor for injuries caused by the failure so to do.³⁶ The contractor is liable for injuries to a servant of a subcontractor where resulting from defects in that part of the work done by the contractor.³⁷ Where the employee of a contractor is injured by the combined fault of the contractor and the owner, the latter is liable.³⁸

C. Actions³⁹ — 1. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS. A person injured by the act of a servant may usually sue either the master or the servant, or both,⁴⁰ the action being ex delicto.⁴¹ A statutory remedy applicable where one employed by a contractor is injured is not exclusive so as to prevent an action by the servant against the owner.⁴² Where an officer is not considered the servant of the person requesting his appointment, such as a special policeman in some states, the remedy is upon the bond given by the person securing his appointment.⁴³

2. GROUNDS AND DEFENSES. The general grounds on which the action against the master for the acts of his servant is based have already been considered.⁴⁴ So have many of the defenses, such as the non-existence of the relationship of master and servant,⁴⁵ the act not within the scope of the employment,⁴⁶ etc. The following have been held not defenses: The good motive of a servant;⁴⁷ consent of plaintiff to the absence of the servant, where he failed to return as he had promised, which was the cause of the injury;⁴⁸ the servant losing his temper and without provocation using an unreasonable amount of force;⁴⁹ and the fact that the judgment for the damages resulting might be enforced by an execution against the person.⁵⁰

ous to operate without instructions, and plaintiff was injured, by neglect to notify him of the dangerous character of the machine, and to instruct him, the defense that plaintiff was an employee of an independent contractor is not available, since a resulting injury might have been anticipated as the direct consequence of the performance of the work contracted for, where no reasonable care was exercised. Jacobs v. Fuller, etc., Co., 67 Ohio St. 70, 65 N. E. 617, 65 L. R. A. 833.

Continuous nature of duty.—If there is a duty to furnish the contractor with appliances, it seems that it is not necessary for the contractor to keep watch of the work to determine when appliances are necessary. *Miller v. The contributory fault of plaintiff may bar a recovery,⁵¹ although his improper conduct is ordinarily not a defense.⁵² The master's knowledge that his servant was insane at the time of the employment renders the master liable for a killing by the servant.⁵³ The statutory liability of a servant does not preclude the common-law liability of his master.⁵⁴

3. PARTIES. The master and servant may be sued jointly in most states to recover damages resulting from the tort of the servant.⁵⁵ However, the servant is not a necessary party to an action against the master,⁵⁶ and where the employment is joint, so that several are liable as masters, any one of them may be sued alone.⁵⁷

4. PLEADING — a. In General. Where an action is brought by a third person against a master to recover damages for injuries resulting from the acts of defendant's servants, the complaint must allege the existence of the relationship of master and servant,⁵⁸ and that the servant was acting as such at the time of the injury,⁵⁹ and negligence⁶⁰ or other wrongful act⁶¹ of the servant.⁶² Except where the Construction of pleadings.—Alleging that plaintiff was on defendant's premises at the latter's request for the purpose of doing certain work on a roof does not show that plaintiff was in defendant's employ. Barowski v. Schultz, 112 Wis. 415, 88 N. W. 236. The word "being," as used in the allegation that a named person, being defendant's servant, negligently set a fire which extended to plaintiff's land, refers to the time of the alleged negligence. Henderson v. Chapman, 3 Ont. Pr. 331.

59. Birnbaum v. Lord, 7 Misc. (N. Y.) 493, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 17, holding that a complaint alleging that a wagon which had run over plaintiff belonged to defendants, and was driven by one of their agents or servants, sufficiently shows that the driver was acting as defendants' servant at the time of the injury.

60. See Brasher v. Kennedy, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 28, holding that a complaint must charge the negligence to be that of the master without mentioning the servant.

Mode of pleading negligence in general see NEGLIGENCE.

Details of negligence.—Where negligence was alleged in driving a wagon, plaintiff will not be required, on motion, to state in detail in what the negligence consisted, and in what manner the horse and wagon were negligently driven. Adams Express Co. v. Aldridge, 20 Colo. App. 74, 77 Pac. 6.

Pleading evidence.—In an action for injuries to plaintiff by being struck by a wagon driven by defendant's servant, the rate of speed of the wagon is a matter of evidence, and need not be pleaded. Lachenbruch v. Cushman, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 476.

Whether one or more causes of action are stated.—In an action against a railroad company and its employees for injuries, where the petition alleges that the injuries were caused by the negligence of all the defendants in operating a train, and by the negligence of the company in not having the cars equipped with proper apparatus, the petition is not open to the objection that it states one cause of action against all defendants and another cause against the company only. *Pugh v. Common counts.—A complaint which alleges in the form of a common count that defendant by one of its employees committed an assault on plaintiff is sufficient. Letts v. Hoboken R., etc., Connecting Co., 70 N. J. L. 358, 57 Atl. 392; Lewis v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 35 Fed. 639. And see Lewis v. Schultz, 98 Iowa 341, 67 N. W. 266.

Description of servants.—A complaint for damages from being handcuffed and tied to a post under orders of the captain of defendant's steamer sufficiently shows which of defendant's servants were the wrong-doers, where it alleges that the acts were committed by defendant's servants and agents, "who action is against the servant,⁶³ the complaint must allege that the act was within the scope of the servant's employment,⁶⁴ although there need not be a direct averment in terms.⁶⁵ The facts must be stated to show that the act was within the scope of the servant's employment,⁶⁶ the general averment that the acts were within the scope being insufficient because a mere conclusion of law.⁶⁷ If the action is based on a statute the complaint must allege the necessary facts to bring the case within the statute.⁶⁸ Where the action is brought by an employee of a contractor against the owner, the complaint must set forth the facts to show the liability of the owner.⁶⁹

b. Evidence Admissible Under Pleadings. As in other civil actions, evidence outside the issues presented by the pleadings is not admissible.⁷⁰ Where the servant's negligence is the only ground relied on in the complaint, evidence is inadmissible to show the incompetency or intemperateness of the servant,⁷¹ or to show defects in the machinery.⁷² Under a general denial, evidence is admissible to show that plaintiff assaulted the servant first, and the latter acted in self-defense.⁷³

5. EVIDENCE — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof.⁷⁴ The burden of show-were at said time in charge of said steamer." Trabing v. California Nav., etc., Co., 121 Cal. 137, 53 Pac. 644.

Texas.—See Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Freeman, (Civ. App. 1903) 73 S. W. 542.

Sufficiency of allegations.—Where the complaint in an action for injuries caused by collision with a truck alleges that the truck was "in possession of defendants' servant, who was driving the same," it sufficiently alleges that the truck was driven by defendants' servant in the course of his employment, as it will be presumed that the servant was acting within his duty. Doherty v. Lord, 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 227, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 720.

Omission as ground for demurrer to evidence.—Where the petition alleges that the injuries were caused by the negligent act of defendant's servant, but omits to state that he was guilty of such act while employed as such servant in discharge of the duties of his employment, a demurrer will not lie to the evidence by reason of this omission, since the omitted matter might be reasonably implied from the allegation of the petition. Todd v. Havlin, 72 Mo. App. 565; Voegeli v. Pickel Marble, etc., Co., 49 Mo. App. 643.

commit an assault "upon a porter or workman employed and performing his duties as such" on defendant's premises is not an admission that the foreman was acting within the scope of his authority, where there is no evidence that the porter and the foreman committing the assault were the same person. *Meehan v. Sufficiency of allegations to show firm an independent contractor.—An allegation that a certain firm was constructing a portion of the road-bed of a railroad company, and that plaintiff was working for them as a common laborer, sufficiently shows that said firm were independent contractors. Boyle v. Great Northern R. Co., 13 Wash. 383, 43 Pac. 344.

ing negligence on the part of defendant's servants,⁷⁵ and that it was the cause of plaintiff's injury,⁷⁶ is upon plaintiff. So ordinarily the burden is upon plaintiff to show that the person whose act caused the injury was the servant of defendant,⁷⁷ and that he acted within the scope of his employment.⁷⁸ The facts may, however, raise a presumption that the person causing the injury was in the employ of defendant at the time of the injury,⁷⁹ and that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment.⁸⁰ If defendant claims that he is not liable because the work was being done by an independent contractor, it seems that the burden is upon him to prove such relationship;⁸¹ but where the employer is sought to be held liable for the negligence of an independent contractor, the burden is upon plaintiff to show a failure of the employer's duty to see that the materials furnished by the employer, and used by the contractor, were suitable for the purpose.⁸²

b. Admissibility—(1) EXISTENCE OF RELATION. To show the relationship of master and servant, evidence of the giving of orders by the former to the latter is admissible.⁸³ So evidence that the master's name was on the wagon which the servant was driving is admissible.⁸⁴ Where the servant is also a police officer, evidence of such fact is admissible.⁸⁵ Any legal evidence is admissible to show that the alleged servant was in reality an independent contractor.⁸⁶

Servant driving master's horse.—Where a boy was in defendant's employ and had been sent by him to get goods, during which time the horse he was driving ran over plaintiff, it will be presumed the boy was at the time acting in his employment, and the burden of showing the contrary was on defendant. Cleveland v. Newsom, 45 Mich. 62, 7 N. W. 222. If the master is being driven by the servant, it may be inferred without other

Ownership of wagon.—In an action for injuries sustained by reason of the negligence of the driver of a wagon said to belong to defendant, testimony as to the routes of defendant's drivers on the morning of the accident, for the purpose of showing that the wagon referred to was not one of defendant's, was properly excluded. *Perstein v. Admissibility of contract.—In a suit against the concessionaires under a concession from an exposition company for the erection of certain structures for personal injuries sustained while said structures were being erected an agreement between the contractor and defendants is admissible to show the state of affairs at the time of the accident, but not for the purpose of binding plaintiff. De La Vergne Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. McLeroth, 60 Ill. App. 529.

Indemnity policy.—On an issue as to whether the person, through whose negligence plaintiff was injured, was an independent contractor, evidence is admissible that defendants held a policy indemnifying them from liability by reason of injury to any employees and that the insurer was defending

(II) NEGLIGENCE IN EMPLOYING SERVANT. Evidence of the habits of the servant is admissible to show that he was not a suitable person to be employed, and that the master, by reasonable diligence, might have discovered what his habits were.⁸⁷ And this rule applies where the relation is that of contractor and contractee, instead of master and servant.⁸⁸

(III) *NEGLIGENCE OF SERVANT.*⁸⁹ To show negligence on the part of the servant, evidence of his general incompetency is inadmissible,⁹⁰ as is evidence that he was discharged shortly after the accident.⁹¹ Evidence is inadmissible on behalf of the master to show that he properly instructed the servant as to the use of the property,⁹² that instructions were given the servant to be cautious,⁹³ or that the servant was ordinarily a sober, careful, or skilful man, where plaintiff has not attempted to show the contrary.⁹⁴ Evidence that the servant was intoxicated at the time of the accident is admissible;⁹⁵ and where it was admitted that the servant had been drinking on the day of the accident, evidence that defendant knew of the servant's intemperate habits was admissible.⁹⁶ So evidence of the servant's habit of doing the act resulting in the injury is admissible to show that the master knew of and permitted, or should have known of, in the use of ordinary care, the acts.⁹⁷ Where the negligence charged is a violation of the rules of the master, a book containing such rules is admissible.⁹⁸ Evidence that defendant ordered an animal, injured through the negligence of his servant, to be shot, and that he expected to pay plaintiff its value, is not admissible.⁹⁹

(IV) SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT. Any legal evidence is admissible which tends to show that the servant acted outside the scope of his employment at the time of the injury.¹ Where a servant testifies that no authority had been given him to invite any one to come on the premises, evidence that instructions had been given him not to permit persons to visit such premises is immaterial.² The

To whom permit to do work issued.—Where defendant claimed that excavations made in a street were made by an independent contractor, and that the work was done under the supervision and direction of the city engineer, it is proper to prove by the city engineer that the permit to do the work was secured by one stated to be defendant's general manager. *Montgomery St. R. Order to servant not to do act.—In an action for damages occasioned by fires alleged to have been started by defendant's servants, there is no error in allowing a witness to testify that he heard defendant order his servants not to start any fires as tending to show that defendant had not authorized fires. *Moe v. conduct of a servant is not evidence of his authority to commit a tort, although he had been employed a long time and was not called as a witness to deny his authority.³

(v) LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF CONTRACTOR. Where a contractor is sought to be made liable for an injury to an employee of a subcontractor by the fall of a building, evidence is admissible, on the issue of notice to defendant, that some time before the accident the superintendent of the building notified defendant that the building was unsafe.⁴ So, where an employee of a subcontractor was injured on a train of the construction company, evidence is admissible to show that the employee frequently rode on the train, and that the construction company made no objection.⁵

(vi) EVIDENCE AS TO DAMAGES. Where punitive damages are not recoverable, and defendant admits the negligence, evidence of the circumstances of the injury and of gross negligence is inadmissible.⁶

c. Weight and Sufficiency. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence in actions against the master for the acts of his servant, or in an action against an employer for the acts of independent contractors, or their employees, is governed by the rules applicable thereto in civil actions in general.⁷ A preponderance of the evidence is sufficient;⁸ and even in an action against a master for damages for a wilful homicide committed by his servant, no element of the case need be established with such certainty as to leave no reasonable doubt on the minds of the jury.⁹ Evidence that a wagon which ran into plaintiff bore defendant's name act,¹⁹ and the incompetency of the servant.²⁰ So whether the master knew or ought to have known of the carelessness or incompetency of the servant, and whether he might have known by the exercise of diligence, are questions for the jury.²¹ And it is a question for the jury whether a railroad tricycle was a dangerous instrumentality, within the rule holding the master liable for injuries caused by his servant in the use thereof.²² So the question whether injury ought reasonably to have been anticipated from the doing of work let out to a contractor is a question for the jury.²³ Where there is conflicting evidence, or different inferences may be drawn, the liability of the contractee for the acts of his contractor or the contractor's servants is a question for the jury.²⁴

Notice imputed to employer.—Where an independent contractor, employed to keep defendant supplied with coal, delivers a wagon-load through a manhole in the sidewalk, maintained by defendant for that purpose by permission of the city, and fails to properly replace the manhole cover, it is for the jury to say whether notice could be imputed to defendant, so as to render him liable for an accident to a traveler occurring fifteen minutes later. *Benjamin v. Instructions as to negligence.—It is proper to charge that the jury may consider, in determining whether the servant was negligent, the fact that he had no practical experience in the work, where that was admitted. Bower v. Cushman, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 45, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 1103. Where the evidence failed to show negligence on the part of defendant's servants, it was proper to instruct that if the jury believed the injury sustained was caused by an unavoidable accident on the part of the servants of defendant without negligence on their part, they should render a verdict for defendant. Steen v. Williamson, 92 Cal. 65, 28 Pac. 53. As to what constitutes negligence in sending out servants without foreman where constructing telephone line see Clay v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 70 Miss. 406, 11 So. 658.

Construction of charge.—An instruction, in an action for the death of a person by the reckless driving of another, that if defendant's servants, "while in the service of defendant," through their negligence, caused a wagon in their control to run against decedent, causing his death, a verdict for plaintiff should be rendered, was not open to the objection that it authorized a verdict without finding that the servants were at the time of the accident engaged in the performance of their duties. Louisville Water Co. v. Phillips, 89 S. W. 700, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 557.

In an action against both master and servant an instruction defining the extent of the master's liability for the acts of his servant should be limited to the liability sought to be imposed on the master as such for the acts of the servant. Johnson v. Barber, 10 Ill. 425, 50 Am. Dec. 416.

Charge as to scope of employment.—An instruction to find for defendant, if the employee is not acting within the scope of his employment, is improper, standing alone, without further explanation. Case v. Hulsebush, 122 Ala. 212, 26 So. 155. An instruction precluding a recovery if the jury should believe that the act of the servant was malicious "and not done in the interest and business of the defendant" is erroneous and misleading, where used instead of the phrase "not done in the line of his employment and while acting within the scope of his authority." Williams v. Southern R. Co., 115 Ky. 320, 73 S. W. 779, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2214. An instruction that if a servant's wrongful act is not done in the interest or in the prosecution of the master's business the master is not liable is erroneous as excluding liability for acts of the servant within the scope of his employment, but not with the intent of promoting the master's business. Southern R. Co. v. Wildman, 119 Ala. 565, 24 So. 764. An instruction that defendant was liable only for those acts committed by its servants in doing those things necessary in getting a piano sufficiently guarded defendant's rights where the servant had committed an assault on plaintiff as they were removing a piano at the request of plaintiff. Canton v. Grinnell, 138 Mich. 590, 101 N. W. 811. Sufficiency of instruction as to departure of servant from the direct course of duty, although for a purpose of his own, as not of itself such a departure from the master's business as to relieve him from liability see Loomis v. Hollister, 75 Conn. 718, 55 Atl. 561.

The parties, on request,²⁸ are entitled to instructions correctly stating the law of the case.²⁹ The instructions must be applicable to the issues³⁰ and to the facts which the evidence tends to prove.³¹ Matters in dispute must not be assumed as facts,³² and the charge must not be misleading.³³ Questions of law must not be submitted,³⁴ while on the other hand the instructions must not invade the province of the jury.³⁵ The instructions are to be construed as a whole, and the fact that one portion considered separately might be open to contradiction does not constitute error if the charge is correct in its entirety.³⁶

9. VERDICT, FINDINGS, AND JUDGMENT. On this question it is sufficient to say that the general rules applicable in civil cases as to verdict and findings³⁷

Contributory negligence.—An instruction stating the liability of the master for the acts of his servants is erroneous where it wholly ignores the necessity of proof of care on the part of plaintiff. Chicago City R. Co. v. Freeman, 6 Ill. App. 608. But an instruction which does not pretend to determine the liability of defendant but merely lays down the general principles of care required by its servants need not state that plaintiff when injured must have been in the exercise of care. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Woolridge, 32 Ill. App. 237.

General instructions as to the liability of a master for the acts of his servant, although correct, may be insufficient where there are no specific instructions adapted to the facts bearing on each of the claims of both parties. Dore v. Babcock, 74 Conn. 425, 50 Atl. 1016. For instance, where the court instructed that "to ratify" means to confirm or approve of, and that such ratification may be signified by acts of omission as well as of commission, and that in deciding the question the jury might consider what defendant did not do that he should have done, as well as what he did do indicative of affirmance, it was held erroneous because the jury should have been told in the particular case under what circumstances the retention of an employee constitutes ratification, and that they might have found ratification from the failure of the master to see plaintiff after she had told her story. *Cobb v. Finding as conclusion of law.—In an action against an employer for an assault committed on plaintiff by an employee, a special finding of the jury that the employee was not acting in the course of his employment at the time of the assault is a mere conclusion of law, and may be disregarded in rendering judgment where other special findings show that the employee was acting in the course of his employment at the time. *Fick v. 10. APPEAL AND ERROR. The rules which govern the disposition of appeals from judgments in civil actions in general apply equally well to an appeal from a judgment in an action against a master to recover for the acts of his servant or independent contractor.³⁹

VI. LIABILITY OF THIRD PERSON TO MASTER FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT.⁴⁰

As a general rule the master has no right of action for personal injuries to his servant unless some loss of service or capacity to serve results therefrom.⁴¹ This rule has been applied to assaults upon the servant.⁴² The principles which govern the right to recover in such a case are those which govern the right of a parent to recover for the loss of services of his child by reason of personal injuries,⁴³ or an action by a husband to recover for injuries to his wife.⁴⁴

VII. INTERFERENCE WITH THE RELATION BY THIRD PERSONS.

A. Civil Liability⁴⁵ — 1. ENTICING SERVANT TO LEAVE EMPLOYMENT — a. General Rule. A third person who wilfully entices a servant, knowing that he is in the

38. See, generally, JUDGMENTS.

Recovery against master where servant acquitted.—Where a master and servant are joined as defendants in an action founded solely on the negligence of the servant, on the acquittal of the servant there can be no recovery against the master. Indiana Nitroglycerine, etc., Co. v. Lippincott Glass Co., 165 Ind. 361, 75 N. E. 649 [reversing (App. 1904) 72 N. E. 183]; Montfort v. Hughes, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 591. Contra, Gardner v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 341, 43 S. E. 816.

Judgment as evidence in action by master against servant.—In an action by a master to recover from his servant the damages which he has been made to pay for the servant's negligence, the judgment against the master for the damages is evidence against the servant who was notified and who was a witness in the damage case; and such judgment is properly taken as the basis for the judgment in the case against the servant unless error is shown. Costa v. Yochim, 104 La. 170, 28 So. 992. Judgments as conclusive against persons responsible over see JUDGMENTS. 23 Cyc. 1270.

If the servant dies of the injuries it seems that the master has no cause of action. Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88, 42 L. J. Exch. 53, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 197, 21 Wkly. Rep. 409; Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89.

Actions for torts springing from contract, which consist in a mere omission of a contract duty, must be brought by the party injured, and cannot be sustained by the master on the part of his servant for loss of services. Fairmount, etc., St. Pass. R. Co. v. Stutler, 54 Pa. St. 375, 93 Am. Dec. 714.

Menial servants.—This rule has been held inapplicable, however, to permit a recovery where the person injured was an agricultural laborer and not a menial servant. Burgess v. Carpenter, 2 S. C. 7, 16 Am. Rep. 643. But such limitation is not now recognized.

False imprisonment.—Where a person of full age is hired by the year, as a clerk, by a merchant, the relation of master and servant is thereby created sufficient to sustain an action on the case by the employer, for loss of service, against one who unlawfully imprisons the person employed. Woodward v. Washburn, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 369.

employ of another, to quit such service is liable in damages to the master.⁴⁶ This rule has been reiterated by statutes in several of the states,⁴⁷ which have been held constitutional.⁴⁸ It is immaterial that the servant is enticed away before the commencement of the performance of services.⁴⁹ But a person making a contract with a servant of another, to take effect at the expiration of his term of service, is not liable.⁵⁰ It must be shown that the third person acted maliciously, not in the sense of actual ill-will to the employer, but in the sense of an act done to the apparent damage of another without legal excuse.⁵¹ It follows that if a Menial services.—The rule is not confined to contracts for menial services. Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555.

Where one agrees to work out a debt, and thereafter hires out to another, and the creditor takes the servant away after such hiring, the creditor is not liable for enticing, at least not until the debt is worked out. Wharton v. Jessey, 46 Ga. 578.

Justification.—The third person is not liable if he was justified, but there is no general rule as to what constitutes justification which must be determined by the circumstances of the particular case. In analyzing the circumstances, regard might be had to the nature of the contract broken, the position of the parties to the contract, the grounds for the breach, the means employed to procure the breach, the relation of the person procuring the breach to the person breaking the contract, and also to the object of the person procuring the breach. Glamorgan Coal Co. v. South Wales Miners' Federation, [1902] 2 K. B. 545, 72 L. J. K. B. 893, 89 L. T. Rep. N. S. 393, 52 Wkly. Rep. 165.

47. See the statutes of the several states. In Kentucky, under a statute providing that any person who wilfully entices another to break a contract of service shall be liable to the person injured, it has been held that a theatrical manager who maliciously induces an actress to break her engagement at another theater, and to perform at his own, is not liable to the manager of the first theater, since the statute was intended to apply to farm laborers and other like laborers, and not to the services of an artist. Bourlier v. Macauley, 91 Ky. 135, 15 S. W. 60, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 737, 34 Am. St. Rep. 171, 11 L. R. A. 550.

Under a statute fixing a penalty for enticing one to "leave the service" of his employer, it is not an offense to entice servants to quit work where they have been hired, but have not commenced work. Sears v. Whitaker, 136 N. C. 37, 48 S. E. 517.

50. Boston Glass Manufactory v. Binney, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 425.

51. Morgan v. Smith, 77 N. C. 37.

The term "malicious," used in this connection, is to be given a liberal meaning. The act is malicious when the thing done is with the knowledge of plaintiff's rights, and with the intent to interfere therewith. It is a wanton interference with another's contractual rights. Ineffective persuasion to induce another to violate his contract would not of itself be actionable, but if the persuasion be used for the purpose of injuring plaintiff, or benefiting defendant at the expense of plaintiff, with a knowledge of the subsistence of servant is employed by a third person, without notice of his employment by another, the third person is not liable.⁵³ Employment by an agent⁵³ or tenant⁵⁴ of a third person, without the latter's authority, knowledge, or consent, does not make him liable, unless he subsequently ratifies the act. If the servant is not legally bound because of the invalidity of the contract, and he himself terminates the relation, no action can be maintained against one who subsequently employs such servant.⁵⁵ It has been held that where one who employs a person, without knowledge that he is the servant of another and has quit before the expiration of his term, discovers such facts before the termination of the original employment, he is not liable, although he afterward refuses to discharge the servant.⁵⁶

b. Relation of Master and Servant. To maintain an action for enticing away a servant, there must be a contract of hire with the party complaining, entered into by the servant himself or by some other person having authority to bind him to the service.⁵⁷ To constitute one a servant, so that a third person will be liable to the master for enticing him away, the relation need not be created by a written contract,⁵⁸ except where the statute otherwise provides;⁵⁹ and it is immaterial that the contract is invalid, under the statute of frauds, because not in writing.⁶⁰ A contract of hire, although voidable on the part of the servant, sufficiently creates the relation.⁶¹ So if the contract is in writing it is not essential that it should have been made in the presence of witnesses.⁶² Furthermore the terms of the employment need not bind the servant to give his exclusive personal services to the master for the whole time agreed on.⁶³ A cropper is a servant, within the rule as to enticing away.⁶⁴

c. Actions. An action for enticing away a servant is for a tort, and not for a breach of an implied contract.⁶⁵ The common-law remedy by an action on the case is available, notwithstanding the existence of a remedy by an action for the penalty, as provided for by statute, where it is merely cumulative.⁶⁶ The right to sue may be lost by failure to notify the third person of the prior contract of hire,⁶⁷ or by a failure to comply with conditions precedent in the statute.⁶⁸ If the contract, it becomes a malicious act, and if injury ensues from it a cause of action accrues to the injured party. Employing Printers' Club v. Doctor Blosser Co., 122 Ga. 509, 50 S. the complaint is for harboring or entertaining a servant, evidence of enticement is not necessary.⁶⁹ Employment is prima facie evidence of enticement,⁷⁰ inasmuch as it will be presumed, where one knowingly hires the servant of another, that the servant was enticed away.⁷¹ The general rules as to pleading,⁷² admissibility of evidence,⁷³ and instructions to the jury⁷⁴ applicable to civil actions in general govern an action for enticing away.

d. Damages. The measure of damages for enticing away the servant of another, who is hired for a definite time, is the actual loss sustained by the master.⁷⁵ If an entire loss of service during the balance of the term of employment is shown, the value of the services for all of such time is recoverable.⁷⁶ In a proper case exemplary damages may be awarded.⁷⁷ By statute, in some states, double damages may be recovered.⁷⁸

Net profits.—The average net profits made by men of fair business capacity, out of the labor of such a servant during the year for which the enticed servant was hired, are recoverable. Lee v. West, 47 Ga. 311. Where, in an action for enticing away plaintiff's servants, it appears that defendant's conduct was of an aggravated character, a verdict for less than the net profits which plaintiff would have realized but for defendant's conduct, and for plaintiff's loss by reason of his inability to improve his property, is properly rendered, and not excessive. Smith v. Goodman, 75 Ga. 198.

Value of services, expenses, and damages sustained.—In an action for damages for enticing away plaintiff's servants, plaintiff will be entitled to recover the value of the services lost up to the commencement of the suit, the reasonable expenses necessarily incurred in getting the servants back again, and damages for the loss of time, trouble, and injury sustained in consequence of such taking away. Hays v. Borders, 6 Ill. 46.

Value of services while in defendant's employ.—While the value of the services during the time the servant has been in defendant's employ is recoverable, the jury may, in certain aggravated cases, give the whole value of the servant by way of damages, as where, after ill blood has been created between a master and servant by the intermeddling of a third person, the servant ceases to be of any value to the master. *Dubois v. In Mississippi, by statute, one who knowingly employs a laborer under contract to another for a specified time is liable in double damages. It has been held, under such statute, that the fact that the laborer breaks the contract and ceases to work thereunder before he is employed by defendant does not render the latter any the less liable, and that the measure of damages is double the damages sustained because of the breach of contract by the laborer, and is not limited to double the damages sustained by the employer because of the laborer's employment by defendant. Armistead v. Chatters, 71 Miss. 509, 15 So. 39. Indebtedness of a servant to his master, created by the contract of hiring, is not a proper element of damages. Chrestman v. Russell, 73 Miss. 452, 18 So. 656. employment,⁸⁰ since if the attempt to procure the discharge, although malicious, is not successful, the act is not actionable.⁸¹ It is no defense that the service is for no fixed period,⁸² that the act of discharge does not give a right of action against the employer himself,⁸³ or that the wages are not fixed.⁸⁴

b. Motive.⁸⁵ The bad motive of the third person who procures the servant's discharge is immaterial where the acts done by him are legal in themselves and violate no superior right of the servant.⁸⁶ And a threat to do what defendant has a right to do is held not such a threat as will make defendant liable irrespective of motive.⁸⁷ On the other hand express malice on the part of the person procuring the discharge need not be shown, it being sufficient that there was an intentional interference without lawful justification.⁸⁸ If the act was wilful, Tayntor, 68 Vt. 219, 35 Atl. 53, 54 Am. St. Rep. 882, 33 L. R. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, 62 J. P. 595, 67 L. J. Q. B. 119, 77 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717, 46 Wkly. Rep. 258.

Threat to withhold gratuity.—If a third person simply threatens to withhold a gratuity from an employer, although provided for by contract, if he does not discharge an employee, the latter has no cause of action, when such withholding or breach of contract is not of itself proof of procurement or persuasion to make the discharge; but evidence of such threat is, it seems, admissible to show that the withholding or breach was used with malicious purpose and as a means of procuring or persuading the employer to discharge the employee. malicious, and unlawful, it is not necessary that the discharge was procured by false and fraudulent representations.⁸⁹

c. Pleading⁹⁰ and Evidence.⁹¹ The complaint, in an action to recover damages for a discharge owing to false statements alleged to have been made by defendant, must state the substance of the statements.⁹² Where the complaint alleges a contract of employment for a period of time, no recovery can be had where there is no evidence of a contract for a definite term of service.⁹³ The burden of proof is upon defendant to show that plaintiff obtained, or might have obtained, employment during the time in question after his discharge.⁹⁴

d. Damages. The measure of damages for wrongfully causing plaintiff's discharge from his employment is the same as the master himself is liable for where he discharges his servant without cause,⁹⁵ that is, the contract price for the term less sums earned or which could have been earned by the servant.⁹⁶ The speculative profits of a new or proposed partnership between the employer and the employee are too uncertain to be recoverable.⁹⁷ It seems that exemplary damages may, in a proper case, be recovered.⁹⁸

B. Criminal Prosecutions — 1. OFFENSES — a. In General. Statutes in some of the states make punishable as a crime the enticing away or the employment of a servant of another,⁹⁹ or the preventing him from performing the duties

N. S. 899; Holder v. Cannon Mfg. Co., 135 N. C. 392, 47 S. E. 481, 138 N. C. 308, 50 S. E. 681. But see Perkins v. Pendleton, 90 Me. 166, 38 Atl. 96, 60 Am. St. Rep. 252 (holding that whenever a person by means of "fraud or intimidation" procures the discharge of an employee, where, but for such wrongful interference, the employment would have continued, he is liable in damages for such injuries as naturally result therefrom). Contra, Bonsall v. Reagan, 7 Del. Co. (Pa.) 545.

Libelous charges.—One person cannot advise another to discharge an employee, accompanying his advice with libelous charges, and escape liability therefor. Hollenbeck v. Ristine, 114 Iowa 358, 86 N. W. 377; Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 59 N. E. 125, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 52 L. R. A. 115.

What constitutes justification for interference.—Competition in trade, employment, or business constitutes sufficient justification for interference. But a desire to compel the employee to surrender a cause of action, wholly disconnected with the continuance of his employment, does not afford justification for interference by a third person who desires the satisfaction of the alleged liability. London Guarantee, etc., Co. v. Horn, 206 Ill. 493, 69 N. E. 526, 99 Am. St. Rep. 185 [affirming 101 Ill. App. 355]. So the conduct of the servant in going on a strike and refusing to make up for lost time cannot be used by the employer to effect his discharge from a subsequent employment. Holder v. Cannon Mfg. Co., 135 N. C. 392, 47 S. E. 481.

Whether the inducement is false slanders or successful persuasion is immaterial. Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 59 N. E. 125, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 52 L. R. A. 115. Contra, see Perkins v. Pendleton, 90 Me. 166, 38 Atl. 96, 60 Am. St. Rep. 252.

If persuasion is used for the indirect purpose of injuring the servant, or of benefiting the third person at the expense of the servant, it is a malicious act and therefore a wrongful one, so as to be actionable if injury results therefrom. *Bowen v. 99. See the statutes of the several states. See also Murrell v. State, 44 Ala. 367.

What constitutes employment by accused.—The word "employment" as used in a statute forbidding the employment of a servant of another under written contract means any use of a servant for a special or general purpose inconsistent with his duty to his employer, with a mutual benefit. The contract need not be signed by the master. Hightower v. State, 72 Ga. 482.

In Louisiana the enticing away of a servof a lawful employment.¹ Of course no offense is committed where the master consents to the hiring by the accused.² Under a statute providing for the punishment of both the enticer and the servant, the servant cannot be punished for leaving his master's service without enticement.³ No offense is committed where the accused had a prior verbal contract with the laborer, the term of which had not expired, and which the prosecutor enticed him to abandon,⁴ even though the contract was voidable under the statute of frauds, where treated by the parties thereto as valid.⁵

b. What Constitutes Enticing. The mere employment of a servant after he has left his former master does not constitute an enticing away.⁶

c. Who Are Servants or Laborers. A superintendent is not a servant within such a statute.⁷ A cropper hired to work land for a part of the crop is a laborer;⁸ but not where he rented the farm and was to make a crop and have full control of the farm, although he was to pay as rent half of all he made.⁹ If he rents land for a stipulated rental and agrees to cultivate it with the understanding that he will work for the landlord whenever the latter needs him, the relation is that of landlord and tenant rather than master and servant.¹⁰

d. Infant Servants. Enticing away an infant servant is an offense, although the infant's contract is voidable, since the privilege of avoiding is personal to the infant.¹¹ But after an infant has disaffirmed his voidable contract for personal services, a person who entices him away is not punishable.¹² If the contract for the infant's services was made with his father¹³ or guardian,¹⁴ a person enticing the servant away is not guilty of an offense where the statute forbids the enticing away of a servant under contract with another.¹⁵ And a father, after hiring out his minor child, may entice or order him to quit without committing a punishable offense.¹⁶

2. PROCEDURE — a. Indictment or Complaint. The indictment or complaint must follow the statute by setting forth all the facts and circumstances going to make up the offense.¹⁷ An indictment for enticing away must either state the christian ant is not an offense. State v. Sypher, 19 La. Ann. 71.

State*, 92 Ala. 78, 9 So. 728, holding that one charged with the offense of enticing a minor from a person to whom his mother has hired him cannot justify upon the ground that his father is entitled to his services, when it appears that the father deserted his family when the child was two years old, and has since contributed nothing to his support.

16. Driscoll v. State, 77 Ala. 84; State v. Anderson, 104 N. C. 771, 10 S. E. 475.

17. Triplett v. State, 80 Miss. 379, 31 So. 743 (holding that an indictment merely alleging the starting to move a laborer or tenant was insufficient); Fischer v. State, 101 Wis. 23, 76 N. W. 594.

Intimidating servant to abandon employment.—An indictment under a whitecapping statute alleging acts to intimidate a person into an abandonment of his home and employment does not sufficiently aver that his home is in a certain county by alleging that the intimidation took place in such county. The indictment should show the nature of the business conducted by the employer, should allege that the persons intimidated were in his employ, and should describe the employer as a corporation, firm, etc. It must name of the laborer or allege that it is unknown;¹⁸ the fact that the person enticed or employed was a laborer;¹⁹ the name of the person in whose employ the servant was at the time of the alleged illegal act;²⁰ the name of the agent of the accused who is alleged to have unlawfully employed the servant;²¹ and the absence of the employer's consent to the reemployment.²² It need not specify whether the contract of employment was written or oral,²³ nor the acts or words by which the enticement was effected.²⁴

b. Variance. A conviction cannot be had upon a charge of enticing away a laborer or servant, by proof of enticing away a renter or share cropper, where the two acts are made different offenses by statute.²⁵ So an indictment for enticing away or hiring a servant of another is not supported by evidence that the hiring was done by defendant's agent or partner in business, and that defendant knowingly received a part of the profits of the laborer's service.²⁶

c. Evidence. The rules relating to the admissibility and sufficiency of evidence in criminal cases in general apply to prosecutions for interfering with the relation of master and servant.²⁷

Admissibility.—A declaration made by the accused to the effect that he himself would not live with the prosecutor is irrelevant on the trial of one charged with enticing away the servant of another. Broughton v. State, 114 Ga. 34, 39 S. E. 866.

Sufficiency.—Evidence that the servant left the place of his employment in company with accused is insufficient to sustain a conviction for enticing away the servant of another. Broughton v. State, 114 Ga. 34, 39 S. E. 866.

Harmless error.—Error in refusing to allow one accused of attempting to intimidate workmen to testify whether he intended to intimidate them is harmless where he had denied any attempt to intimidate them. Fischer v. State, 107 Wis. 23, 76 N. W. 594.

"Subject" and "matter" are often used as synonyms, and as used in a constitutional provision, that every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, they are nearly so, the only difference being the offices they are respectively made to perform. "Subject" is there used to indicate the chief thing about which a legislation is had, and "matters," the things which are secondary, subordinate, or incidental. Clarke v. Darr, 156 Ind. 692, 697,

MATTER IN PAIS. Matter of fact that is not in writing.³¹ (See IN PAIS.)

MATTERS OF SUBSISTENCE FOR MAN. A phrase which comprehends all articles or things, whether animal or vegetable, living or dead, which are used for food, and whether they are consumed in the form in which they are bought from the producer, or are only consumed after undergoing a process of preparation, which is greater or less, according to the character of the article.³²

MATURITY. Applied to commercial paper, the time when the paper becomes due and demandable.³³ As used in a will, lawful age;³⁴ the combined result of age and education.³⁵ (Maturity: Of Bill or Note, see COMMERCIAL PAPER. Coke defines a maxim as "a proposition to be of all men confessed and granted without proof, argument or discourse. A sure foundation or ground of art, so called, quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maximè omnibus probetur, so sure and uncontrollable as that they ought not to be questioned. And that which Littleton calleth a maxim, hereafter he calleth a principle, and it is all one with a rule, a common ground postalatum or an axiome, and it were too much curiosity to make nice distinctions between them." 1 Coke Litt. (Thomas) 16, 17.

Basis of nomenclature.—"A maxim is so called because its dignity is chiefest; its authority the most certain; and because it is universally approved by all." Morgan Leg. Max.

I. DEFINITION.

Mayhem at common law is defined as the violently depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able in fighting to defend himself or to annoy his adversary.¹

1. 4 Blackstone Comm. 206; 1 East P. C. 393. It is similarly defined in Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 245, 246; State v. Johnson, 58 Ohio St. 417, 423, 51 N. E. 40, 65 Am. St. Rep. 769; Com. v. Porter, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 502, 505; Terrell v. State, 86 Tenn. 523, 525, 8 S. W. 212.

Glanville defines mayhem as "the breaking of any bone or injuring the head by wounding or abrasion." Foster v. People, 50 N. Y. 598, 605, 1 Cow. Cr. 508.

Maim and mayhem are equivalent terms at common law and mean the same thing. State v. Johnson, 58 Ohio St. 417, 51 N. E.

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS.

A. In General. The crime was a felony at the ancient common law,² but whether it was so regarded at common law after the retaliatory punishment was superseded by fine and imprisonment³ the authorities are not in accord.⁴ The nature of the offense has since been fixed by various statutory provisions as a felony both in England and the United States,⁵ or a misdemeanor, according to the gravity of the injury against which the statute provides or the circumstances under which the injury is inflicted.⁶

B. Intent—Malice and Premeditation—1. IN GENERAL. At common law an indictment for mayhem could be supported only when the act was done with malice,⁷ and under the Coventry Act⁸ the deed must have been committed of malice aforethought and of a deliberate and premeditated design to do an injury of the sort described;⁹ but the malicious intention need not have been directed against any particular person,¹⁰ and although the statute provided against the particular acts "with intention to maim or disfigure," yet if the intent was of a higher nature, as to murder, and in the attempt the offender did not kill but only maimed, it was an offense within the act.¹¹ So under the American statutes the

3. See infra, VI.

4. Felony.—Blackstone classifies the crime at common law as a felony, although he leaves the nature of the offense in doubt after the punishment membrum pro membro was changed by saying that after this punishment went out of use "by the common law, as it for a long time stood, mayhem was only punishable with fine and imprisonment; unless perhaps the offence of mayhem by castration, which all our old writers held to be felony." 4 Blackstone Comm. 205. East says that all maims were said to be felony anciently because the offender had judgment of the loss of the same member he had occasioned, but that afterward the judgment was fine and imprisonment, from which the offense seems to have been afterward considered more in the nature of an aggravated assault. 1 East P. C. 393. But he classes the offense as a "felony, punishable by Fine and Imprisonment." 1 East P. C. 392. In Com. v. Porter, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 502, 504, it was held that the offense was always a felony at common law and that it was so in Pennsylvania; that the discord in the authorities comes from early misquotations of Coke as defining the offense as "under all felonies and above all other inferior offences," whereas his language is (as appears from 1 Coke, 1st Am. ed. from 19th London ed. p. 127): "This offence of mayhem is under all felonies deserving death, and above all other inferior offences." See also 1 East P. C. 393.

Misdemeanor.—But it has been regarded as of a lower grade than felony at common law after the punishment was changed, except in the one instance of mayhem by castration. Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404 (holding that mayhem, at common law, was not a felony, because there was no judgment of forfeiture either of lands or goods and therefore it is not one of those offenses for which it is necessary for the injured party to prosecute the criminal to conviction or acquittal before he is entitled to his action for damages); Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 245; Com. v. Lester, 2 Va. Cas. 198 (where it is held that the offense was not felony, with one exception).

Immaterial.—In Foster v. People, 1 Colo. 293, it was held that the question whether the offense was felony or misdemeanor was important only with reference to the old rule that a conviction for misdemeanor could not be had upon an indictment for felony, which does not prevail in Colorado.

6. See Strawn v. State, 14 Ark. 549 (felony under the statute, but a maim inflicted in a mutual fight is not a maiming but an aggravated assault); Carpenter v. People, 31 Colo. 284, 72 Pac. 1072; Foster v. People, 1 Colo. 293 (under a provision reducing the offense to a misdemeanor when the injured person was assailant); State v. Holmes, 4 Pennw. (Del.) 196, 55 Atl. 343 (where it appears the offense was a felony if there was a lying in wait, otherwise a misdemeanor); State v. Fisher, 103 Ind. 530, 3 N. E. 379 (felony where the maiming is with malice, otherwise "simple mayhem").

10. Rex v. Carroll, Leach C. C. 66; 1 East P. C. 396.

Blow aimed at another.—If a blow be intended to maim one and by accident maim another the offense may be committed. 1 East P. C. 396 [citing Wright's Case, Coke Litt. 127, 1 Hale P. C. 412, 11 Jac. 1].

act must be done in the manner and with the intent inhibited, as maliciously, on purpose, and with evil intent;¹² but this is generally all that is necessary under provisions punishing the wilful, intentional, or malicious acts prescribed; the act is maliciously done when it is done on purpose and with evil intent and whether such an act results in the unlawful purpose intended or in some other evil or unlawful purpose makes no difference.¹³ And so where the offense is simply the unlawful depriving of the member, etc., the specific intent to maim is not necessary,¹⁴ nor the specific intent to injure as to a particular part of the body; but if the act is intentionally done from which the resultant inhibited act arises the offense is complete.¹⁵ Sometimes under the statute the injury must be wilfully inflicted with the intent to injure, disfigure, or disable, that being the offense punishable by the statute;¹⁶ but this intent may be presumed from the act of maiming unless the contrary appears.¹⁷

2. PREMEDITATION — LYING IN WAIT — a. In General. At common law the act might have amounted to mayhem no matter how sudden the occasion,¹⁸ but under the Coventry Act there not only must have been malice aforethought but by lying in wait for the premeditated purpose,¹⁹ and so under like provisions in

W. 222, 33 Am. St. Rep. 414 (where an instruction was upheld which distinguished the intent from mere accident and permitted the presumption from a wilful act that defendant intended the natural consequences thereof); State v. Ormond, 18 N. C. 119 (on purpose).

13. Molette v. State, 49 Ala. 18; State v. Simmons, 3 Ala. 497 (holding that a malicious design to injure is meant); People v. Wright, 93 Cal. 564, 29 Pac. 240 [distinguishing Godfrey v. People, 63 N. Y. 207; Tully v. People, 67 N. Y. 15, both of which were under statutes requiring premeditated design evinced by lying in wait] (holding premeditation not necessary); State v. Skidmore, 87 N. C. 509; Davis v. State, 22 Tex. App. 45, 2 S. W. 630 (presumption of intention if such means are used as would result in maiming).

Malice is implied from the unlawful act unless circumstances of provocation are shown to remove the presumption. Baker v. State, 4 Ark. 56; Carpenter v. People, 31 Colo. 284, 72 Pac. 1072; Terrell v. State, 86 Tenn. 523, 8 S. W. 212 (under a statute not specifying that the act should be done with intent to maim); Worley v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 172.

15. Molette v. State, 49 Ala. 18.

16. State v. Hair, 37 Minn. 351, 34 N. W. 893; Republica v. Langcake, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 415 (holding that under the first clause of an early statute there, only a general intent to maim was necessary, but that under another clause directed particularly against putting out the eye, a specific intent to pull or put out the eye was necessary); Davis v. State, 22 Tex. App. 45, 2 S. W. 630 (distinguishing assault with intent to maim and the offense defined as maiming); State v. Bloedow, 45 Wis. 279.

17. State v. Jones, 70 Iowa 505, 30 N. W. 750 (where an instruction was sustained which charged that a specific intent to disfigure was an essential element of the crime, and that such intent might be inferred or presumed if the act which caused the disfigurement was done deliberately, and the disfigurement was reasonably to be apprehended as the natural and probable consequence of the act, but that they ought to consider all the circumstances of the transaction in determining whether the specific intent existed in defendant's mind at the time, or whether he did the act deliberately); State v. Clark, 69 Iowa 196, 28 N. W. 537; State v. Hair, 37 Minn. 351, 34 N. W. 893; State v. Girkin, 23 N. C. 121; State v. Crawford, 13 N. C. 425; State v. Evans, 2 N. C. 281. But in State v. Cody, 18 Oreg. 506, 23 Pac. 891, 24 Pac. 895, it was held that where the injury was inflicted in a fight which arose out of a sudden heat of passion the offense was not committed. The statute was directed against the "purposely and maliciously" doing particular acts, and the court proceeds upon the reasoning of Tully v. People, 67 N. Y. 15, and Godfrey v. People, 63 N. Y. 207, which were upon a statute expressly requiring premeditated design evinced by lying in wait or otherwise.

18. 1 East P. C. 393.

19. State v. Mairs, 1 N. J. L. 453; Rex v. Tickner, 1 Leach C. C. 222, where the injury arose out of a sudden attack unconnected with any premeditated design against the person and it was held not to be within the statute.

One need not rush from a lurking place in order to come within the meaning of the provision requiring a lying in wait, but if after forming the intention to maim he takes a convenient opportunity of deliberately doing the injury it is sufficient. State v. Mairs, 1 N. J. L. 453; Rex v. Mills, 1 Leach C. C. 294.

American statutes requiring a lying in wait,²⁰ or premeditation,²¹ evinced by lying in wait or otherwise, under which the existence of the design cannot be found from the mere proof of the commission of the act.²² On the other hand it is held that the malice aforethought may be implied even under a statutory provision embracing malice aforethought,²³ and a premeditated design is not necessary because the purpose may be inferred from the act,²⁴ and so the premeditated design may be inferred from the nature of the act where the statute does not expressly require malice aforethought and lying in wait.²⁵

b. Where Injury Inflicted in Conflict. Under the statutory rule that there must be a premeditated design, if the injury arises out of a sudden attack unconnected with any premeditated design, against the person the offense is not committed.²⁶ On the other hand it is held that even while the act must be done with malice aforethought it is entirely immaterial at what period of time the design was formed;²⁷ and in other cases, under provisions which are fully met by proof of the commission of the act, from which the law will presume that it was done unlawfully and maliciously unless the evidence shows the contrary, it does not matter that the intent was formed during the conflict.²⁸ Under some of the statutes guilt is excluded when the act is done by "change medley, sudden affray or adventure,"²⁹ or in a fight.³⁰

3. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MAIM. A charge of the commission of an act with intent to maim cannot be supported as to the intent charged where the act alleged does not constitute a maiming.³¹ But where maiming is a felony an assault with intent to maim is an assault with intent to commit a felony under a statute punishing the latter offense,³² and sometimes the statute provides specifically against certain assaults, as shooting at or shooting a person, with intent to maim,³³ or cut-

20. Respublica v. Langecake, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 415 (holding that the malice and lying in wait need not be expressly proved but may be collected from the circumstances of the case as in Rex v. Mills, 1 Leach C. C. 294), supra, note 19; Pennsylvania v. McBirnie, Add. (Pa.) 28.

21. State v. Cody, 18 Oreg. 506, 23 Pac. 891, 24 Pac. 895, under a provision requiring the act to be "purposely and maliciously" done.

both of which cases it appears that the statute provides that no person shall be found guilty of mayhem where the fact occurred during a fight had by consent, nor unless it appear that the person accused shall have been the assailant, or that the party maimed had in good faith endeavored to decline further combat, etc.

31. Foster v. People, 50 N. Y. 598 (where it was held that the provision of the statute was intended as a statutory definition of the crime of mayhem, and that the term included only the injuries there enumerated; that a blow aimed at, and delivered on, the head, cannot constitute the crime of assault and battery with intent to maim); State v. Johnson, 58 Ohio St. 417, 51 N. E. 40, 65 *Am. See also Com. v. Lester, 2 Va. Cas. 198. So under a statute against wounding with intent to maim and disable, it was held that there was no proof of an intent to maim and disable, as the blow was aimed at the head of the prosecutor, although it would have been otherwise if it had been aimed at his arm to prevent his being able to use it. *Reg. v. ting or stabbing with such intent;⁸⁴ and if the intent to maim is wanting the offense is not made out, although there may have been an assault.⁸⁵

C. Nature, Means, and Extent of Injury—1. NATURE IN GENERAL. If the injury disfigured only without diminishing the victim's corporal abilities it did not fall within the crime of mayhem at common law.⁸⁶ The offense was at an early date regulated and enlarged by statutes in England⁸⁷ and in the United States, many of which statutes declare what acts shall constitute maiming, although some of the acts enumerated amount to mayhem at common law and some do not, the blending of them in the same definition putting all of them on the same legal footing,⁸⁸ as under provisions directed against the depriving of a human being of a member of his body or disfiguring it or rendering it useless, and sometimes expressly defining such acts so resulting as mayhem or maiming,⁸⁹ or making

State*, 86 Tenn. 523, 8 S. W. 212; Chick v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 161; 1 East P. C. 393, where it is said that upon this distinction, the cutting off, disabling, or weakening a man's hand or finger, or striking out an eye or foretooth, or castrating him, or, as Lord Coke adds, breaking his skull, are said to be maims; but the cutting off his ear or nose are not such at common law.

37. 1 East P. C. 393, where the early acts are shown, the first being that of 5 Hen. IV, c. 5, to remedy a mischief which then prevailed of beating, wounding, imprisoning, or maiming persons, and after purposely "cutting their tongues or putting out their eyes," to prevent them from giving evidence against the perpetrators, the offense being declared a felony. The act of 37 Hen. VIII, c. 6, was directed against the cutting off or causing to be cut off an ear.

The Coventry Act, being the act of 22 & 23 Car. II, c. 1, and called the Coventry Act from the circumstances of its having passed on occasion of an assault made on Sir John Coventry in the street, and slitting his nose, by persons who lay in wait for him for that purpose, in revenge as was supposed for some obnoxious words uttered by him in parliament, provided "that if any person or persons shall, on purpose and of malice forethought, by laying in wait, unlawfully cut out or disable the tongue, put out an eye, slit the nose, cut off a nose or lip, or cut off or disable any limb or member of any subject; with intention in so doing to maim or disfigure him in any the manners before mentioned; that then the person or persons so offending, their counsellors, aiders, and abettors, knowing of and privy to the offence as aforesaid, shall be declared to be felons, and suffer death as in cases of felony without benefit of clergy." But not to work corruption of blood, forfeiture of dower, or of the lands or goods of the offender. 1 East P. C. 394.

Transverse cut.—The slitting of the nose was not confined to any particular form or direction, but any division of the flesh or gristle of the nose, whether perpendicular or transverse, came within the denomination of a slit and was equally a disfiguring. *Rex v. punishable maiming, wounding, or disfiguring, in more general terms,⁴⁰ or making punishable certain acts, without designating the offense, including such as would have been mayhem, at common law,⁴¹ and the military or combative importance of the organ injured or destroyed to which the old common law had special regard is of no significance.⁴²

2. MEANS. The statute against depriving a person of the use of a limb, etc., may be violated by whatever instrument or means it is done.⁴³

3. EXTENT OF INJURY. Where the inhibition is directed against an injury which disfigures, it is not necessary that the whole member should be mutilated or detached if the injury impairs comeliness;⁴⁴ but the cutting or biting off of a small portion of the member which does not disfigure the person, and could only be discovered by close inspection, or examination, when attention is directed to it, will not constitute mayhem under the statute.⁴⁵ Under a provision defining maim as, among other acts, the depriving one of any member of his body, if the act is once completely committed the offense is not the less complete because the member was put back and grew to its proper place,⁴⁶ but it is held that by disabling a limb or member, the statute contemplates a permanent injury, not a mere temporary disabling.⁴⁷

United States.—U. S. v. Scroggins, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,243, Hempst. 478.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Mayhem," §§ 3, 4.

Act with intent to maim not mayhem.—But in Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 245, it is held that in a statute declaring that if any person with malice, etc., and with an intention to maim and disfigure, shall unlawfully cut off an ear of another, he shall be punished, etc., the word "maim" is used in the popular sense of "mutilated," and not as synonymous with the technical word "mayhem," as the statute does not make the cutting off the ear mayhem, but only punishes the act defined.

40. State v. Vaughn, 164 Mo. 536, 65 S. W. 236.

Similar statutes in England.—See Reg. v. Spooner, 5 Cox C. C. 392; Rex v. Boyce, 1 Moody C. C. 29; 9 Geo. IV, c. 31, § 12; 43 Geo. III, c. 58, § 1; 1 Vict. c. 85, § 4.

To constitute a wound under the English statute (1 Vict. c. 85, § 2) for wounding, etc., with intent to maim or disable, it was held that the whole skin must be broken. Reg. v. McLoughlin, 8 C. & P. 635, 34 E. C. L. 934; Rex v. Wood, 4 C. & P. 381, 19 E. C. L. 564. But where the skin was divided by throwing a sledge-hammer it was a wounding within 9 Geo. IV, c. 31, §§ 11, 12, although the sledge-hammer, from being blunt, was not an instrument calculated to inflict a wound. Rex v. Withers, 4 C. & P. 446, 1 Moody C. C. 294, 19 E. C. L. 595. And there need be no effusion of blood. Reg. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 173, 34 E. C. L. 673. So under the act 9 Geo. IV, a charge of wounding with intent to disfigure cannot be supported by proof of the throwing of vitriol into the face of the injured person, as this is not a wounding. Rex v. Murrow, 1 Moody C. C. 456.

41. State v. Cody, 18 Ore. 506, 23 Pac. 891, 24 Pac. 895; State v. Vowels, 4 Ore. 324, which cases hold that the statute extends the law of mayhem as it existed at common law, although it does not use the name except in the title of the chapter of the code covering the matter.

42. Kitchens v. State, 80 Ga. 810, 7 S. E. 209.

43. Baker v. State, 4 Ark. 56; U. S. v. Scroggins, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,243, Hempst. 478. See also Carpenter v. People, 31 Colo. 284, 72 Pac. 1072.

Biting off the nose is held to be a cutting off, within the meaning of the statute of New Jersey. State v. Mairs, 1 N. J. L. 453. But see U. S. v. Askins, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,471, 4 Cranch C. C. 98, for a different construction of a Virginia statute.

The word "bite" is not equivalent to the word "slit," as used in Cal. Pen. Code, § 203, defining "mayhem," with respect to slitting the lip. People v. Demasters, 105 Cal. 669, 39 Pac. 35.

Wounding with intent to maim.—Under the English statute 9 Geo. IV, for wounding with intent to maim, etc., the character of the instrument used has been held to be immaterial, and a kick producing a wound will be sufficient. Briggs' Case, 1 Lew. C. C. 61, 1 Moody C. C. 318. See also Reg. v. Duffill, 1 Cox C. C. 49. But see Rex v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 446, 32 E. C. L. 700; Rex v. Stevens, 1 Moody C. C. 409, which cases confine the wound to such as is produced by some instrument. Where the prisoner struck the prosecutor on the side of his hat with an air-gun, with great force, by which the prosecutor was wounded, but the wound was made by the violence with which the hat was struck, the weapon used by the prisoner never coming in contact with the head of the prosecutor, it was held a wounding. Rex v. Sheard, 7 C. & P. 846, 32 E. C. L. 903.

D. By and Upon Whom Committed.⁴⁸ The crime may be committed by a white man on the body of a slave,⁴⁹ and the statutes are held to give the same protection to the internal organs of the female as to the external organs of the male.⁵⁰ Under early English statutes which were directed against the maiming of others, it was held that if one maimed himself or procured himself to be maimed, both he and the party by whom the maim was effected were subject to fine and imprisonment.⁵¹

III. INDICTMENT.⁵²

A. Allegation of Offense in General. Where the statute defines what acts shall constitute the offense it is sufficient to allege the commission of such acts in the terms of the statute,⁵³ although the exact language need not be employed if equivalent terms are used.⁵⁴ And so where the statute prescribes a punishment for maiming, it is sufficient to allege the commission of acts which will constitute maiming as defined.⁵⁵ An express allegation in addition that in so disfiguring or maiming defendant assaulted the injured person is not necessary.⁵⁶ At the common law, in both the appeal of mayhem and the indictment, the offense must be alleged to have been committed feloniously,⁵⁷ and so the offense must be charged in the United States, where it is regarded as a felony at common law;⁵⁸ but it is held that where the word enters into no part of the definition of the offense as created by the statute, it is properly omitted in the indictment.⁵⁹

B. Charge of Intent. An indictment under a statute making the intent or purpose an essential element of the offense must allege such intent,⁶⁰ or pur-

State*, 3 Pinn. (Wis.) 373, 4 Chandl. 168.

54. Tully v. People, 67 N. Y. 15.

55. Davis v. State, 22 Tex. App. 45, 2 S. W. 630. Under a statute providing a punishment where any person "shall be maimed, wounded, or disfigured" by the act of another under circumstances which would constitute murder or manslaughter if death had ensued, an indictment alleging that defendant did unlawfully assault and cut with a knife prosecuting witness, whereby he was "maimed, wounded, and disfigured, and received great bodily harm," sufficiently charges the offense. State v. Vaughn, 164 Mo. 536, 65 S. W. 236. See also Jennings v. State, 9 Mo. 862 [followed in State v. Magrath, 19 Mo. 678].

58. Com. v. Porter, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 502. In Com. v. Read, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 459, 10 Pa. L. J. 141, it is held that whether mayhem be felony or misdemeanor it is properly charged as being feloniously done. But see Com. v. Lester, 2 Va. Cas. 198.

59. State v. Absence, 4 Port. (Ala.) 397.

60. 1 East P. C. 402. In State v. Briley, 8 Port. (Ala.) 472, it is said that the statepose,⁶¹ and the intent charged must be to accomplish the particular result against which the statute is directed.⁶²

C. Charge of Premeditation and Malice. Where the element of premeditated design is essential the indictment must allege it,⁶³ but the circumstances showing it need not be alleged;⁶⁴ and the act must be alleged to have been maliciously and wilfully done where these are statutory elements.⁶⁵

D. Nature of Injury. An indictment for a common-law maim must allege that the party was thereby maimed,⁶⁶ notwithstanding a fixed purpose to maim is not an element of the crime,⁶⁷ or that he was disfigured,⁶⁸ or disabled where the statute punishes, as an offense, a disabling or disfiguring by the infliction of certain injuries.⁶⁹ But the nature of the injury need not be set forth more specifically than in the general language of the act.⁷⁰ Conversely under a statute which prescribes a punishment for biting or slitting the tongue, nose, lip, etc., ment of the assault and battery and breaking the arm were but a history of the violence, which could have been omitted; that the superadding the intention to maim is, when examined, nothing more than a reiteration of the idea previously conveyed to the mind, by the words "on purpose, and of malice aforethought."

Shooting with intent.—An indictment under an act which prohibits unlawfully shooting at any person, etc., with intent to maim must charge the intent with which the act was done in the words prescribed in the statute. State v. Elborn, 27 Md. 483.

61. State v. Ormond, 18 N. C. 119.

62. State v. Johnson, 58 Ohio St. 417, 51 N. E. 40, 65 Am. St. Rep. 769.

63. Tully v. People, 67 N. Y. 15.

64. Tully v. People, 67 N. Y. 15, under a statute providing against certain acts committed with premeditated design evinced by lying in wait or otherwise. But in Republica v. Reiker, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 282, it is held that the indictment should contain the words "lying in wait." And so it was under the Coventry Act. 1 East P. C. 402.

Different grades of offense.—Under a statute in Delaware one section of which provides that, if any person shall maliciously and by lying in wait deprive any person of one of his genital members, or put out an eye, etc., he shall be deemed guilty of a felony; and another section of which provides that if any person shall maliciously, without lying in wait, maim another, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined, an indictment under the latter, charging defendant with maiming prosecutrix by throwing acid into her eyes and injuring one of them, was held not objectionable for failure to charge that the offense was committed either with or without lying in wait. State v. Holmes, 4 Pennew. (Del.) 196, 55 Atl. 343.

65. See Neblett v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1905) 85 S. W. 813, holding that an indictment charging that defendant made an assault on the prosecutor, and then and there unlawfully and maliciously set fire to a cannon cracker held by the prosecutor, which exploded, and destroyed the prosecutor's hand, sufficiently charged that the hand was blown off wilfully and maliciously.

Wound less than mayhem.—In Louisiana, where the indictment charged defendant with "feloniously" inflicting a wound less than mayhem, under Act (1888), No. 17, and omitted the words "maliciously and wilfully," as contained in the statutory definition of the offense, it was held that no judgment could be entered upon the plea of guilty, as the indictment charged no offense against the law. State v. Watson, 41 La. Ann. 598, 7 So. 125.

66. Guest v. State, 19 Ark. 405; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 245; Chick v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 161.

Designating offense generally see INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATION, 22 Cyc. 302.

67. Terrell v. State, 86 Tenn. 523, 8 S. W. 212.

68. Terrell v. State, 86 Tenn. 523, 8 S. W. 212.

69. Com. v. Lester, 2 Va. Cas. 198.

Equivalent language.—Tully v. People, 67 N. Y. 15, holding an indictment for mayhem, under a statute defining the crime as "cutting off or disabling any limb or member of another intentionally," sufficient which charges that the accused did "cut, bite, slit, and destroy" the thumb of the prosecutor, the evidence proving that the thumb was disabled, since the word "destroy" requires stronger proof than the statutory word "disable."

70. Kitchens v. State, 80 Ga. 810, 7 S. E. 209, holding that an allegation that the person whose private parts were injured was a female is equivalent to a direct allegation that the injury did not amount to castration.

What member injured.—In charging actual maim the indictment should set forth what member was actually injured, but in charging an assault with intent to maim under the statute it is not necessary to set forth the manner in which it was intended to inflict the injury. Ridenour v. State, 38 Ohio St. 272. In an indictment for biting off an ear, it need not be alleged whether it was the right or the left ear. State v. Green, 29 N. C. 39.

That the party was maimed need not be alleged where the statute contains all the necessary ingredients of the offense, which are charged, although it would be otherwise if the statute merely adopted the common-law without giving a name to the offense, the fact that the indictment designates the crime as mayhem does not affect the validity of the verdict.⁷¹ Where the statute punishes specific injuries inflicted with intent to maim and disfigure, it is not necessary to allege that the accused did maim and disfigure,⁷² or to describe the instrument used.⁷³

E. Allegations Under Alternative Provisions — Duplicity.⁷⁴ Where the words of the statute are in the disjunctive, with intent to maim or with intent to disfigure, an averment of either is sufficient;⁷⁵ and the general rule is applied that upon a statute enumerating disjunctively several offenses connected with the same transaction and with the intent necessary to commit the offense, they may be alleged conjunctively and must be so alleged when embraced in one count.⁷⁶

IV. DEFENSE.⁷⁷

Son assault demesne is a good defense to an indictment or to an appeal of mayhem at common law,⁷⁸ and may be shown under the modern statutes;⁷⁹ but the defense can only be sustained by proof that the resistance was in proportion to the injury offered.⁸⁰

V. TRIAL.

A. Evidence and Burden of Proof — 1. BURDEN OF PROOF. As in other criminal cases, the state must prove every element of the offense as charged;⁸¹ and on the theory that the burden of proof never shifts it is erroneous to charge that if the injury is found to have been inflicted the burden is on defendant to offense without defining it. State v. Absence, 4 Port. (Ala.) 397; Guest v. State, 19 Ark. 405.

71. Swan v. Com., 5 Ky. L. Rep. 238. An offense made punishable by Oreg. Cr. Code, § 527, which punishes acts like those in the Coventry Act, may be denominated mayhem in indictments. State v. Vowels, 4 Oreg. 324.

72. U. S. v. Gunther, 5 Dak. 234, 38 N. W. 79; Com. v. Read, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 459, 10 Pa. L. J. 141.

76. Angel v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 231, where the charge was "shooting with intention to maim, disfigure, disable, and kill." See also Derieux v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 379.

Several means of commission.—So under a statute providing several means in the alternative whereby the offense may be committed, an indictment may charge them conjunctively as one offense, as that the accused "did slit, cut off and bite off the ear." State v. Ailey, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 8. See also Canada v. Com., 22 Gratt. (Va.) 399; Briggs' Case, 1 Lew. C. C. 61, 1 Moody C. C. 318, proof of either means sufficient.

77. Plea in criminal cases see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 343 et seq.

78. 1 East P. C. 402, where it is said that this plea is confined to defense of person and not extended to defense of property, unless the defense is against a known felony threatened to be committed with violence against his property.

79. State v. Skidmore, 87 N. C. 509.

Wilfulness of slave.—Under a statute declaring that every slave "who shall wilfully maim, put out an eye, or cut, or bite off the lip, ear, or nose of any white person, shall suffer death," it is held that an intentional and unnecessary mutilation, by a slave, of any of the members of a white person, enumerated in the statute as constituting mayhem will be "wilfully" committed, but that if the slave be engaged in mortal strife, his adversary armed with a deadly weapon, and he defenseless, such a mutilation will not be considered as having been wantonly done when it would be deemed wilful, within the meaning of the act. State v. Abram, 10 Ala. 928.

80. People v. Wright, 93 Cal. 564, 29 Pac. 240 (where, under the statute, a premeditated design being unnecessary, it is held that the fact that the act is done in an altercation is no excuse unless it was done in self-defense, and under circumstances which were at the time unavoidable to prevent the infliction or attempted infliction of great bodily harm by the party injured); Hayden v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 546; 1 East P. C. 402.

81. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 379.

Variance.—When the indictment alleges that the slave who was maimed belonged to defendant's wife, while the evidence shows that defendant himself was the owner, the variance is fatal; the allegation of ownership, being a material part of the description of the slave, must be proved as laid, in order to identify the person on whom the offense was committed, thus enabling defendant to prepare his defense, and making the record of his conviction or acquittal a protection against a second indictment for show that it was inflicted under circumstances making it justifiable.⁸² So where the statute is against an act committed with intent to maim, the intent must be proved;⁸³ but where the intent may be inferred from the act proved, further proof need not be adduced to show intent.⁸⁴

2. ADMISSIBILITY AND SUFFICIENCY. General rules of evidence are applied in admitting evidence on the trial of a prosecution for mayhem or the statutory maim or injuring with intent to maim.⁸⁵ Any evidence which fairly tends to throw light upon a particular issue involved may be considered.⁸⁶ It is error to reject evidence showing that the act was not wilfully and maliciously done where this is an element of the statutory offense.⁸⁷

B. Questions For Jury. Whether the offense has been committed is a question for the jury, and this includes the question of the intent or wilfulness of the act where that is an element of the offense;⁸⁸ and whether the part of the human body mentioned in the statute is a member of the body has been held to be a question of fact for the jury.⁸⁹

the same offense. Eskridge v. State, 25 Ala. 30.

82. State v. Conahan, 10 Wash. 268, 38 Pac. 996, where under the evidence, however, it was held that the error was without prejudice. But in State v. Skidmore, 87 N. C. 509, it is held that where the injury occurred in a fight and there was no proof as to the condition of the parties struggling upon the ground beyond the proof of the fight itself, inasmuch as the mutilation was admitted, a charge which made it incumbent on defendant to satisfy the jury that the act was done in his necessary defense was proper.

Proof of lesser offense see INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS, 22 Cyc. 468.

83. Briggs' Case, 1 Lew. C. C. 61, 1 Moody C. C. 318. An indictment under the English statute 43 Geo. III, for cutting, etc., with intent to maim and disable, is not supported by evidence of intent to produce a temporary disability. Rex v. Boyce, 1 Moody C. C. 29.

84. State v. Jones, 70 Iowa 505, 30 N. W. 750; State v. Ma Foo, 110 Mo. 7, 19 S. W. 222, 33 Am. St. Rep. 414 (sustaining an instruction which permitted the presumption of intention from the act but in which the court fully warned the jury of the presumption of innocence to which defendant was entitled); State v. Girkin, 23 N. C. 121; State v. Crawford, 13 N. C. 425; Davis v. State, 22 Tex. App. 45, 2 S. W. 630. So in Reg. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 173, 34 E. C. L. 673, the court left it to the jury to say whether defendant intended to do that which the instrument he used was naturally calculated to produce.

Extent of injury.—Baker v. State, 4 Ark. 56, where it is held that if the proof shows that the injured person was made lame it will be presumed that the lameness was permanent unless the contrary is made to appear.

Evidence of violent character held admissible under the charge of wounding less than mayhem under the statute. State v. Saunders, 37 La. Ann. 389.

86. See Eskridge v. State, 25 Ala. 30, holding that under an indictment of mayhem of a slave in shooting him in the leg, evidence that the shot "seemed to go together making a continuous wound" is material, and an instruction submitting it to the jury to look to the character of the wound for the purpose of determining whether the accused fired with a view of striking and disabling the leg is not improper, and the jury might properly consider the circumstances above mentioned as indicating that the accused was close to the victim. So discharging a gun at the prosecutor at such a distance that the shot only rattled against his back and could not have injured him will not sustain the felonious charge of shooting with intent to maim. Reg. v. Abraham, 1 Cox C. C. 208.

Whether a corner tooth is a front tooth is a question of fact for the jury. High v. State, 26 Tex. App. 545, 10 S. W. 238, 8 Am. St. Rep. 488.

C. Instructions. The court must submit all questions of fact to the jury and cannot presume in an instruction what must be found by the jury as a fact.⁹⁰ But an instruction is properly refused which imposes a greater burden of proof on the state than the law requires of it.⁹¹ Notwithstanding the charge of mayhem or the particular statutory crime involving mayhem or attempt to maim, involves, as a lesser offense, assault and battery,⁹² where the only question presented by the facts is whether or not defendant committed the higher offense charged in the indictment, the court should refuse to instruct upon the lesser offense.⁹³

D. Verdict.⁹⁴ A verdict of guilty must be certain as to the elements specially found.⁹⁵ Where the accused is acquitted of the larger offense charged in the indictment and found guilty of a lower grade embraced in such charge, the verdict should show with reasonable certainty that the jury has found him guilty of the offense of the lesser grade.⁹⁶

VI. PUNISHMENT.

At the ancient common law the accused on conviction was punished by the loss of the same member of which he had caused the loss;⁹⁷ but later this went out of use and then by the common law as it stood for a long time the offense was punished by fine or imprisonment,⁹⁸ and the offense came to be regarded in

90. Slattery v. State, 41 Tex. 619.

Definition of elements.—The court should define the terms "wilfully" and "maliciously" as qualifying the inhibited act. Bowers v. State, 24 Tex. App. 542, 7 S. W. 247, 5 Am. St. Rep. 901. See also State v. Cook, 42 La. Ann. 85, 7 So. 64 (where it was held to be the duty of the court to define the word "maliciously" in the statute as inflicting a wound less than mayhem); State v. Ma Foo, 110 Mo. 7, 19 S. W. 222, 33 Am. St. Rep. 414 (where an instruction that the jury should find defendant guilty if she made an assault with intent feloniously, on purpose, and of malice aforethought, to maim the boy, and in pursuance of such intent did feloniously, on purpose, and of her malice aforethought, throw a corrosive fluid into the eyes of the boy, and did in such way put out his eyes, where the court thereafter correctly defined the terms "malice," "malice aforethought," and "on purpose"). In State v. Munson, 76 Mo. 109, in a prosecution for wounding whereby the victim was maimed under the statute, it was held that an instruction was sufficient which permitted a conviction if the defendant "did unlawfully assault," without defining the term "maliciously."

91. State v. Jones, 70 Iowa 505, 30 N. W. 750, holding that this would be the effect of an instruction that the jury would not be warranted in convicting unless there was other evidence of the existence of intent than the mere presumption which would arise from the doing of the act or the manner in which it is done, and that such instruction is properly refused.

94. Verdicts generally see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 686 et seq.

95. State v. Blædow, 45 Wis. 279, holding that upon an indictment for mayhem charging the specific malicious intent which under the statute was an essential element, a verdict, "guilty as charged in the information, with the malicious intent as implied by law," was not sufficiently certain as to the intent.

96. Strawn v. State, 14 Ark. 549, where on an indictment for mayhem it was held that a verdict "not guilty as charged in the within indictment, but find that he and the within named . . . fought by mutual agreement" should have shown more explicitly that the person was maimed, yet the conclusion is reasonable that such was the meaning and intent of the jury and the verdict will bear that construction and is sufficient to warrant a sentence for the offense of the reduced grade under a proviso in the statute where the maiming occurs in a fight by mutual agreement.

Sufficient verdict.—On an indictment for maliciously stabbing with intent to maim, a verdict, "guilty of unlawful cutting, as charged in the within indictment," was held sufficient as a finding of the intent, the language used having reference both to the cutting and to the intent. Jones v. Com., 31 Gratt. (Va.) 830. So a verdict, "not guilty of malicious cutting and wounding as charged in the within indictment; but guilty of an assault and battery as charged in the within indictment," was held to show sufficiently an acquittal of the felony charged and a conviction for the misdemeanor. Canada v. Com., 22 Gratt. (Va.) 899.

the nature of an aggravated trespass,⁹⁹ until by statute it was made felony and punishment therefor specifically provided,¹ and in the United States the punishment of conviction is regulated by statute, which either fixes the grade of the offense and assesses the punishment or merely assesses the punishment.²

1. St. 5 Hen. IV, c. 5; 37 Hen. VIII, c. 6; 22 & 23 Car. II, c. 1. Under the last-mentioned act, the offense defined was declared to be felony and the penalty prescribed was death as in the case of felony without benefit of clergy, but not to work corruption of blood, forfeiture of dower, or of the loss of goods of the vendor. 1 East P. C. 393, 394. The subject was also regulated by statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV, and 9 Geo. IV, and later by 1 Vict. 85.

2. See supra, notes 4, 6, 37. See also State v. Ryder, 36 La. Ann. 294, where the punishment was by fine and imprisonment with or without labor, and where it is held that under another statute declaring that persons who default in the payment of a fine may be sentenced to an imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year, one receiving the extreme penalty under the mayhem statute cannot be sentenced to additional punishment at hard labor for another year upon default in payment of the fine.

Change in punishment.—In Clarke v. State, 23 Miss. 261, it was held that where an act changed the punishment from pillory and fine to imprisonment in the penitentiary, and provided that no offense committed and no penalty or forfeiture incurred prior to the act should be affected, the act did not operate as a pardon for offenses previously committed, and that upon conviction after the act for an offense committed prior thereto the accused may elect whether he will take punishment under the old or new act, and that in the absence of an election he should be punished by the act in force when the offense was committed.

1. Origin and history of term.—"Mayor"

[VI]

(præfectus urbis), anciently, "meyr," comes from the British miret, i. e., custodire; or from the old English word "maier," viz., potestas, and not from the Latin "major." Jacob L. Dict. [quoted in Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569, 577]. The word originally meant "an overseer, a bailiff." Webster Dict. [quoted in Waldo v. Wallace, supra].

4. Webster Dict. [quoted in Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569, 577].

"He is an officer of the city, elected by the people by virtue of the provision of the charter." Starkweather v. Superior, 90 Wis. 612, 618, 64 N. W. 304.

Mayor and aldermen as used in the Georgia act of Sept. 26, 1883, touching the town of Reynolds, is synonymous with the corporate name and style "Mayor and Council." Goslin v. Brooks, 89 Ga. 244, 15 S. E. 361.

Avoiding deed for duress of mayor see 9 Cyc. 453 note 66.

5. Black L. Dict.

The term includes any court organized under the legislature pursuant to section 34 of article 5 of the constitution. It is not essential that the court should be presided over by a mayor. Such courts have usually been presided over by a mayor, and called mayors' courts in this state. Ex p. Peacock, 25 Fla. 478, 489, 6 So. 473.

14. Jacob L. Dict.

"Mean time" formerly meant the average or standard sun time, as distinguished from local sun time, as shown by a sun dial. State v. Johnson, 74 Minn. 381, 383, 77 N. W. 293. See TIME.

"Mean sun time" is what is called "standard time." The difference between standard time and sun time is exactly the same over each meridian. There is a difference of four minutes for each degree between true sun time, which is obtained by the means of a dial, and standard or mean sun time. Ex p. Parker, 35 Tex. Cr. 12, 15, 29 S. W. 480, 790. See TIME.

55. Derived from the Latin, mechanicus; the Greek, mechane, a machine. Imperial Dict. [quoted in Mechanical Business Cases, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 1, 3].

56. Webster Dict. [quoted in Mechanical Business Cases, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 1, 4].

The term "mechanical" is employed to indicate that the business, calling, or occupation in view must be one which cannot be utilized unless resort is had to the use of some machinery or instrument of force or appliance of power in aid to manual work in some physical undertaking in which the intervention or interaction of a superior mind is not required. In other words, the expression means that the occupation must be one by which the object realized is not dependent for its condition on the exertion of a controlling intellect, but rather on the adaptation of some helping mechanism or use of some auxiliary tool or instrument. New Orleans v. Robira, 42 La. Ann. 1098, 1099, 8 So. 402, 11 L. R. A. 141, holding that the term does not include photography.

60. Webster Dict. [quoted in Mechanical Business Cases, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 1, 2].

"Mechanical movement" is the combination and arrangement of mechanical parts intended for the translation or transformation of motion. Campbell Printing-Press, etc., Co. v. Miehle Printing-Press, etc., Co., 102 Fed. 159, 168, 42 C. C. A. 235, where the court said: "They are mechanisms adapted usuto or in accordance with the principal laws of mechanics; depending upon mechanism or machinery.⁶¹ (See MECHANIC.)

MECHANICAL EQUIVALENT. As generally understood, a term employed where one thing may be adopted, instead of another, by a person skilled in the art, from his knowledge of the art.⁶² (See, generally, PATENTS.)

ally for employment in wholly different classes of machines . . . [which] happen to require a similar resultant, motion or movement of parts." Distinguished from "philosophical instruments" see In re Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 95 Fed. 973, 974 [citing Robertson v. Oelschlaeger, 137 U. S. 436, 438, 11 S. Ct. 148, 34 L. ed. 744].

61. Imperial Dict. [quoted in Mechanical Business Cases, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 1, 3].

"Mechanical business" is a term which refers to the employment of skilled labor in shaping materials into structures or products of utility, and not as incident to one of the arts or professions. Mechanical Business Cases, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 1, 2, holding that the term does not include preparing and mechanically executing designs for decorating and finishing a building, nor dredging, excavating, building, and executing submarine work. A mechanical business is one closely allied to or incidental to some kind of manufacturing business. Cowling v. Zenith Iron Co., 65 Minn. 263, 268, 68 N. W. 48, 60 Am. St. Rep. 471, 33 L. R. A. 508, holding that the term includes the mining of ore. The business of erecting buildings is a mechanical business. Finnegan v. Noerenberg, 52 Minn. 239, 245, 53 N. W. 1150, 38 Am. St. Rep. 552, 18 L. R. A. 778.

"Mechanical engineer" is an engineer possessing a proficiency not possessed by the others in the knowledge of designing, constructing, setting up, and operating boilers, engines, pumps, and machinery generally. Craven v. Orleans Levee Dist., 51 La. Ann. 1267, 1269, 26 So. 104.

"Mechanical operations" see Robertson v. North Easthope, 15 Ont. 423, 428.

"Mechanical pursuit" see State v. Hirn, 46 La. Ann. 1443, 1444, 16 So. 403; New Orleans v. Lagman, 43 La. Ann. 1180, 1181, 10 So. 244; Theobalds v. Conner, 42 La. Master builders and contractors, who employ others to do the work which they merely superintend, are not engaged in mechanical pursuits. Theo- balds v. Conner, 42 La. Ann. 787, 790, 7 So. 689.

"Mechanical skill" is that skill which involves only the expression of the ordinary faculties of reasoning upon the material supplied, by a special knowledge and the facility of manipulation which results from its habitual and intelligent practice. J. J. Warren Co. v. Rosenblatt, 80 Fed. 540, 542, 25 C. C. A. 625. The term "mechanical skill," as used in patents, is not restricted to the skill of any particular mechanic. Johnson Co. v. Pennsylvania Steel Co., 67 Fed. 940, 942. A roller in a particular combination had been used before without designs on it, and a roller with designs on it had also been used in another combination. It was held that the placing of designs on the roller in the first-named combination should be construed to involve mechanical skill, within the meaning of United States patent laws, as contradistinguished from a patentable invention, and hence not patentable. Stimpson v. Woodman, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 117, 122, 19 L. ed. 866. Distinguished from "inventive genius" in Perfection Window Cleaner Co. v. Bosley, 2 Fed. 574, 577, 9 Biss. 385.

"Mechanical tools."—The ordinary meaning of "mechanical tools" will include those of a dentist. Maxon v. Perrott, 17 Mich. 332, 337, 97 Am. Dec. 191.

"Manual or mechanical labor" see Anderson Driving Park Assoc. v. Thompson, 18 Ind. App. 458, 48 N. E. 259, 260.
